Iowa State University

Dr. W. Robert Parks begins his 20th year as president of Iowa State University, and in that time he has directed this outstanding state institution to national prominence in academics. He has also been a major factor in the growth of the administration, and in excellence of Cyclone athletics.

The author of a book on soil conservation and numerous monographs and periodical entries, Dr. Parks received his bachelor of arts degree from Berea (Ky.) College in 1937 and his master of arts degree from the University of Kentucky the following year. His Ph.D. in political science was earned in 1948 from the University of Wisconsin.

The past president of a host of national educational and university-related associations, Dr. Parks joined the Iowa State faculty in 1948 as a professor of government and remained in that post until 1956, when he went to Wisconsin as a professor of agricultural economics.

He returned to Ames in 1958 as the dean of instruction at Iowa State, and, following a promotion to vice-president for academic affairs in 1961, he became the university's 11th president on July 1, 1965.

Parks saw the university record an all-time record attendance of 26,202 last year.

One of the largest institutions governed by the State Board of Regents, Iowa State is a major midwest center of learning for students from all 50 states and over 85 other nations. The university offers extensive curricula in agriculture, business, design, education, engineering, home economics, sciences and humanities, and veterinary medicine.

The picturesque campus is comfortably situated in a central campus "park"—a splendid combination of conventional and contemporary architectures, and wooded and open landscaping—and an ultra-modern south campus, dominated by the Iowa State Center, the Cyclone Stadium-Jack Trice Field, and the College of Veterinary Medicine.

The Iowa State Center, which boasts one of the nation's finest facilities of its kind, consists of the C.Y. Stephens Auditorium, the J. W. Fisher Theatre, the Schemann Continuing Education Center, and the James H. Hilton Coliseum.

45 Lester Williams

6-1, 224, Junior Cedar Rapids, Iowa (Jefferson High School)

Williams is a two-year starter at Iowa State and figures to again be a key player defensively. He entered fall workouts as the starting weakside linebacker after leading all linebackers in tackles during spring drills. His teammates also selected him as one of five team co-captains at the conclusion of spring practice.

Williams enjoyed an outstanding 1983 campaign in which he racked up 91 tackles at outside linebacker. That was the most by any Iowa State linebacker, the second best total among all Big Eight Conference linebackers, and the fifth highest total among all conference defensive players. He recorded 12 tackles against Vanderbilt in 1983 and collected 12 stops with a fumble recovery in the New Mexico State tilt.

Williams was twice nominated as Iowa State's Big Eight Defensive Player-of-the-Week last season. He was also selected as the ABC Chevrolet Player-of-the-Game in last season's regionally televised contest against Iowa.

The former all-stater from Jefferson High School in Cedar Rapids has played steadily since his freshman season. He began the 1982 campaign in a reserve role at defensive end, then assumed a starting position when starter Rodney Hutchins sustained an injury. Williams responded by leading the defensive ends in tackles. He received his first Big Eight Defensive Player-of-the-Week nomination in 1982 for outstanding play against Kent State.

Cyclone Stadium - Jack Trice Field

Without a doubt, the most beautiful and convenient football facility in the Big Eight Conference is the 50,000-seat Cyclone Stadium—Jack Trice Field. Located on a 30-acre tract, the stadium is part of the ISU Center on the southeast corner of the Ames campus.

In December, 1983, the Iowa State University football facility was officially named. The name of the stadium itself is Cyclone Stadium, with the field now named and dedicated to Jack Trice, Iowa State's first black athlete, who died from injuries he received in his first football game in October, 1923.

The stadium offers an unobstructed view of the playing field as well as remarkably easy access from all parts of the state. The ISU Center includes the stadium, James H. Hilton Coliseum, C.Y. Stephens Auditorium, J.W. Fisher Theatre, the Carl Scheman Continuing Education Building, with lighted parking for 4,000 vehicles.

The stadium was completed in less than two years from the ground breaking, on October 26, 1973, to the first game, a victory over Air Force, on September 20, 1975.

In late 1973 and '74, heavy earth-moving equipment shaped the embankments. A huge, movable form shaped the lower decks with thousands of cubic yards of cement.

Originally, the stadium had a capacity of 42,500, all on the sidelines. In 1976, end-zone bleachers were constructed to bring the capacity to more than 48,000. Standing room tickets, sold for each game bring the capacity to more than 50,000.

The record crowd was 54,066 for the 1983 Iowa State-Iowa game.

The press box is located between the upper and lower decks. There is seating for 123 sports reporters and eight broadcast teams as well as a cafeteria serving area and photographic dark rooms. The press box is structured so that the media representatives can enter using ramps from either end of the stadium, eliminating the need for an elevator. There is an enclosed camera deck atop the west stands.

Opposite the press box on the east side is a modern club section, seating 480 in theatre seats. Included in the club section is a lounge as well as rest room facilities.

The stadium contains 16,000 tons of reinforced concrete, 1,000 tons of structural steel and has a four-inch-thick asphalt base under the Astro-Turf-covered playing field. The Astro-Turf stretches from the edge of the stands on each side and 20 yards beyond each end zone. This allows maximum space for practices.

There are fully electronic scoreboards at each end of the stadium and the north end area features the ISU Victory Bell and the Statue of Cy the the Cardinal.

The Ralph A. Olsen Building is adjacent to the north end of the stadium. The Olsen Building, named for the prominent Ellsworth farmer and alumnus, houses the football facilities and offices as well as the athletic administration facilities.

The total cost of the stadium was $7.6 million. It was paid for through contributions of alumni, friends, and business to the Iowa State Foundation, as well as athletic receipts. More than 15,000 contributors have participated in ISU Foundation projects.

Included in the Olsen Building are locker rooms, team meeting rooms, football coaching offices and staff rooms, the sports medicine clinic, Cyclone Club offices, the athletic ticket office, athletic offices and maintenance facilities.

- An additional occurrence is cause for removal from the stadium and could be grounds for relocation in next season's ticket assignment.

Coach Jim Criner

Since being named Iowa State's 26th head football coach on January 29, 1983, under the slogan "ISU's Finer with Criner", the former Boise State mentor has the Cyclone football program on the rise. Iowa State tied with Oklahoma State for fourth place in the Big Eight Conference last season, marking the first time that ISU has finished in the league's upper division since 1978 when the Cyclones played in the Hall of Fame Bowl.

Criner also earned the distinction as the only first year coach in five decades to finish in the Big Eight's upper division. No ISU coach since George Veenker, in 1931, had won more than four games in his first season. There were 10 coaches and 52 seasons between Veenker and Criner.

Criner, 44, replaced Donnie Duncan who resigned on January 13, 1983 to enter private business. Duncan compiled a 19-23-2 mark in four seasons at Iowa State.

When Iowa State Director of Athletics Max Urick began the search for the new coach, he had special qualities in mind. "[When] we began a search to find the right man to head the football program at Iowa State, among our criteria was a head coach who had proven himself a successful coach," said Urick. "At the same time, we looked for a person with a blend of human qualities and professional credentials. It became apparent that Jim Criner matched our criteria."

Iowa State fans were treated to one of the most exciting gridiron campaigns in school history last fall. The Cyclones shattered 18 team offensive records and faced five teams who were invited to bowl games. Iowa State fans responded by setting stadium attendance records and filling the stadium to 98.6 percent capacity.

Criner has a solid and extensive coaching background, including, most recently, a seven-year stint as head coach of perennial NCAA Division I-AA power Boise State. While guiding the Broncos to a 59-21-1 record, Criner directed the club to four Big Sky Conference titles, two berths in the final round of the NCAA playoffs, and the NCAA Division I-AA championship in 1980.

Prior to his post at Boise State, Criner served on the staffs at Utah, California, Brigham Young, and UCLA. He coached under such widely-recognized coaches as LaVell Edwards, Pepper Rogers, and Dick Vermeil.

Criner began his coaching career in 1963 as an assistant at Charter Oaks (Calif.) High School under current St. Louis Cardinals' head Coach Jim Hanifan. He remained in the prep ranks the next four seasons, leading Claremont (Calif.) High School to the state playoffs twice.

Although his achievements at Boise State elevated Criner to the limelight, not one team in his previous 20 years of coaching had a losing record. After his initial Boise State team went 5-5-1, his successive Bronco squads earned marks of 9-2, 7-4, 10-1, 10-3, and 8-3. While at Boise State, Criner tutored future National Football League standouts Rich Woods (free safety, Pittsburgh Steelers), and David Hughes (fullback, Seattle Seahawks). Among his future Canadian Football League prospects were Cedric Minter (running back, Toronto Argonauts), the league's leading rusher in 1981, and Doug Scott (defensive tackle, Montreal Alouettes), winner of the 1982 Schenley Award. Six players off ISU's 1983 team were selected in professional drafts.

ball and baseball in addition to being an all-league tailback and linebacker at Coachella Valley High School in Thermal, Calif. He attended Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo before playing junior college ball under Seattle Seahawks' coach Dick Manspurger, and then graduated from Cal Poly-Pomona.

Criner comes from a coaching family. He has three brothers who are also pursuing coaching careers. Walt, former offensive coordinator at Cal Poly-Pomona, is the head football coach at Snow College in Ephraim, Utah. Herb is the head football coach at Coeur D'Alene High School in Idaho. Bob is the head basketball coach at Coachella Valley High School in Thermal, Calif.

In the off-season Criner enjoys fishing and pheasant hunting. He is married to the former Ann Marie Shmorhun of Coachella, Calif., and is the father of a son (Mark, 17) and daughter (Kelli, 12).

Cyclones Battle 'Dogs' in Home Opener

September 15, 1984

Cyclone Stadium-Jack Trice Field

If Iowa State's Jim Criner and Drake's Chuck Shelton could turn back time, both head coaches probably would like to wipe the 1984 slate clean and start over. Iowa State suffered a 59-21 defeat at Iowa last Saturday, while Drake fell to intra-state rival Northern Iowa, 33-28, after losing to Southwest Missouri, 17-12, in its season-opener. Neither club had much to brag about until the fourth quarter of their respective games last Saturday when both teams displayed some offensive fireworks. The Cyclone offense scored twice in the final quarter and rolled up 355 total yards against one of the nation's toughest defenses, while the 'Dogs scored 21 points in a furious fourth-quarter rally against the Panthers.

Both Criner and Shelton are counting on their squads to continue that offensive firepower in today's tilt which would give the winner bragging rights in Central Iowa. Iowa State has captured the last 10 consecutive games against the Bulldogs, six of which were shutouts. Drake hasn't notched a victory over ISU since the 1957 squad recorded a 20-0 shutout at Drake Stadium.

The Cyclones battled Drake two seasons ago in Ames and won decisively, 35-10. In that contest, Tommy Davis carried 28 times for 147 yards and one touchdown while Tracy Henderson caught two passes for 35 yards. Criner is hoping for similar results today which would break his club out of a two-game slump that includes the Iowa game and last year's season finale against Oklahoma State. Iowa State's last victory came at Kansas State when the Cyclones bombed the Wildcats, 49-27.

Drake is in the midst of a much more serious slump. The Bulldogs managed only a 1-10 mark last season and have lost 12 of their last 13 games. But quarterback Ray Gronowski's fourth-quarter romp against the Northern Iowa defense was reminiscent of the Bulldogs' offensive firepower in the early '80's—

a bit of nostalgia that worries Criner.

"Drake is an improving football team, especially offensively," said Criner. "They had a great second half against UNI. We have to eliminate our mistakes today and it is important that we execute effectively."

This is also the second consecutive Saturday that both teams have faced an intra-state rival. Criner believes this factor will serve as a motivational tool for the Drake coaching staff and also warns against being misled by Drake's 0-2 record this season.

"This is an intra-state rivalry game and Drake will be sky-high to win. We can't just look at Drake's 0-2 record. We're 0-1 and just got our tails whipped. We'll have to go out and play wild-eyed or it will be another New Mexico State [who defeated ISU 21-17 last year]."

Despite yielding 59 points, the Cyclone defense looked very good at times in last Saturday's contest with Iowa. Iowa State defenders dropped Hawkeye backs for a loss of yardage nine times during the game, and allowed only seven first downs in the first half. In fact, 10th-ranked Iowa had netted only a minus-3 yards rushing until running back Ronnie Harmon exploded for an 86-yard run with 4:27 left in the first half.

Junior co-captain Lester Williams, the starting strong outside linebacker, racked up five solo tackles and six assists Saturday. Middle linebacker Jeff Braswell had nine total tackles, including one for a loss of yardage. Defensive end Jim Luebbers, strong safety Anthony Mayze, and defensive tackle Barry Moore each recorded two tackles for a loss of yardage against the Hawks.

The bright spot for the Cyclone offense was quarterback Alex Espinoza's stellar performance in relief. The 6-1, 191-pounder from Santa Fe Springs, California, rattled the highly-touted Iowa defense with three touchdown passes and 286 passing yards. He was successful in his first four attempts and engineered the Cyclones' first score in his initial series of downs. He marched the Iowa State offense

Despite the lopsided score against Iowa, Henderson was optimistic about the Cyclones' potential this season.

"We have a very good squad," said Henderson. "We need to put this loss behind us and go out against Drake and concentrate on not making the same mistakes that we made against Iowa. The (Iowa) score says one thing, but I looked at how we played and that says something else."

Iowa head coach Hayden Fry also agreed that better days are ahead for the Cyclones.

"I definitely think Iowa State will improve as the season goes along," predicted Fry. "They gave us a good test because they pulled out all the stops. From the standpoint of offensive preparation, I don't know if we will have a more difficult game."

Iowa State has enjoyed great success offensively against the Bulldogs. The Cyclones have tallied 21 points or more in the last five games against Drake, including a 58-14 romp in 1976. On the other side of the ball, Drake's defense would appear to be vulnerable to a big offensive attack. The Bulldogs have surrendered 20 or more points in 12 of their last 13 games, and have allowed 30 or more points in eight of those contests.

Northern Iowa's quarterbacks picked Drake's defensive backfield apart, completing 23 of 33 passes for 293 yards and two touchdowns. The Panthers could manage only 49 net yards rushing, however, on 50 attempts. Wade Harman, a sophomore linebacker, led the Bulldogs defensively with eight solo tackles and seven assists.

The key for the Cyclones in today's game is to correct the costly mistakes which resulted in several Iowa touchdowns a week ago. And in a game where the experts say "you make your own breaks," ISU must execute well enough in today's game to make a few fall its direction this week.

Reminiscing With Harry G. Burrell

Harry G. Burrell served a Sports Information Director at Iowa State University for 37 years.

The 1932 football season had not been a great one for either Iowa State or Drake, however . . .

Fifty-two years ago it would be the season finale for both the Cyclones and the Bulldogs. Whoever won this tilt would be the champion of central Iowa. Drake had won four straight from Iowa State and both teams brought identical 2-4-1 records into the intra-state clash. The preceeding week, Drake had beaten Washington University of St. Louis, 6-0, while the Cyclones lost to Oklahoma, 19-12.

ISU's team captain Dick Grefe was one of several Cyclone players who had suffered through three consecutive losses to the Bulldogs. So, on the Friday afternoon before the game, Grefe promised a victory at a huge campus pep rally. He was as good as his word, almost single-handedly ending Drake's four-year domination of the series.

In his story of the game, the Des Moines Register's sports editor Sec Taylor wrote:

"Unerring passing of Captain Dick Grefe coupled with Harold Templeton, Marlowe Williams, and Herb Ohrt making catches with unbelievable skill beat Drake.

"The overhead attack together with Grefe's runs around end and the plunging of Don Theophilus kept the Bulldogs on the run most of the day. Cyclone blocking and tackling was far superior, too."

Drake got a bad break right away when it fumbled the opening kickoff and Iowa State recovered. But the 'Dogs fought that one off and overcame still another costly fumble in the third period.

Iowa State's third possession brought happier results. Grefe returned a Drake punt 20 yards to the Bulldog 20. Ohrt went off tackle to the Drake 14, and Theophilus bulled over center to the three-yard line. The stubborn Drake defense stopped the Cyclone offensive line twice, but on the third down, Theophilus scored off tackle. Amos Dana converted for the 7-0 lead.

Grefe lofted a pass to Templeton for ISU's next score, and set up the Cyclones' third touchdown with key passes to Williams and Templeton. That tally gave Iowa State a 21-0 halftime lead.

Midway through the third quarter, Grefe handled the ball on all four plays that led to another score. He raced around end for 23 yards, passed to Dana for 30 more, and then cut over left tackle for 24 yards. With first and goal from the three yard line, Grefe went over tackle to make the score 28-0.

Dick Grefe

A short punt that Grefe returned 10 yards to the Drake 20 yard line set up the final ISU score. He connected with Ohrt on the 10 yard line, and it was clear sailing to the end zone as the Cyclones chalked up a 34-0 lead.

Drake managed two touchdowns late in the game, but Iowa State held on to win 34-13 and snap a four-year losing streak to the Bulldogs. Grefe had made good on his promise at the pep rally.

Introducing

VICTORY CLUB

DIRECTOR'S CLUB

CAPTAIN'S CLUB

The success of Iowa State's 21-sport combined men and women's athletic program is due largely to the willingness of alumni and friends to provide a strong base of financial aid. The Cyclone Club is proud to introduce three new recognition levels for those friends who wish to provide "extra special" support for Iowa State athletics. These levels are the Captain's Club ($2,500 annually), the Victory Club ($5,000 annually) and the Director's Club ($10,000 annually). These prestigious new clubs join the long-established Cardinal Club ($500 annually) and Gold Club ($1,000 annually) as the top-level support groups for Cyclone athletics. The Iowa State University Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and the Cyclone Club are indeed proud to honor the members of these clubs listed here—they are leading the way for "Excellence in the Eighties" for the Cardinal and Gold.

MAL SCHMIDT

THE NATION'S BEST IN DEFENSE

by Al Browning, Knoxville News-Sentinel

Tony Degrate, an artist of considerable note, might wear the largest smock ever made.

His sock is pretty potent, too, as University of Texas football opponents will tell you.

Degrate, a 6-4, 280-pound defensive tackle, who also allows his imposing body to take part in such pursuits as painting watercolor prints, pitching baseball, cooking barbecue and fishing for trout, is one of the finest players in the nation.

The folks in Texas make flattering comparisons.

Will he become another Kenneth Sims?

"No," said Texas defensive coordinator David McWilliams, "because Tony is not as tall as Kenneth."

He does seem to be as aggressive.

"Tony is gentle off the field, soft-spoken and kind," said former Texas defensive end Kiki De Ayala. "But when he gets mad, he really plays."

So developed a nickname: Tony De Gratest.

Degrade, a devoted art and education major, would like to become a commercial artist. He likes to paint landscape scenes in Colorado.

We must assume the Denver Broncos, as well as every other NFL franchise, is more aware of his prowess on the football field than his ability to brush pleasing strokes.

"On the field, you have to put that playing mask on, that mean image," Degrade said.

The man does that. He is one of several outstanding defensive players this season; perhaps the best.

'A' is for excellent. Texas has a double-'A' combination working this season. Jerry Gray, 6-1, 195-pound senior free safety, teams with Degrade for a wicked one-two punch.

Degrade had 87 tackles last season, not bad for a tackle, and they included 22 behind the line of scrimmage.

But it was Gray who led Texas tacklers with 116, 87 against the run. He had four interceptions. He caused three fumbles.

Watch those two Longhorns.

Craig Swoope of Illinois loves the blitz.

Safety Phil Parker patrols the secondary for Michigan State.

There are several 'A' defensive players in the nation. All of them are not seniors, of course, and Big Ten Conference fans will probably be in awe after watching Illinois and Michigan State play this year. Two junior safeties, Craig Swoope, 6-1, 195, of the Illini and Phil Parker, 5-11, 178, of the Spartans, will be in a spotlight.

Swoope has been an all-star for two years. He arrived at Illinois "because it was a program on the rise," and he was instrumental in the trip the Illini made to the Rose Bowl last season. He loves the blitz. Opponents hate to see him coming.

Illinois already knows about Parker. He had 12 tackles and an interception for a touchdown in that game last season. He had 11 tackles and two interceptions against Notre Dame.

Size is not of essence when Parker lines up.

You might remember Ken Calhoun. He is the safety, 6-1, 202, who preserved a national championship for Miami last season. He batted down the two-point conversion pass attempted by

From the moment the hot new mid-engine Fiero hit America's streets, it became the driving sensation of the year. And the automotive critics agree:

The Fiero space frame is "milled and drilled" for precise fit of the Enduraflex™ body panels, which resist minor dents and will never rust. And what about Fiero's bottom line?

"We welcome its addition to the ranks of affordable machines for enthusiast drivers." —

Nebraska in the Orange Bowl. He was a junior then.

Calhoun had 96 tackles last season. He should be even better as a senior.

While Miami was winning a national championship, Utah State was posting a 5-6 record and was giving up piles of points. But Hal Garner, 6-5, 223, was starring at linebacker.

Talk to the pro scouts about that senior who had 86 tackles last season. They know a prototype outside linebacker when they see one.

Another 'A'-type outside linebacker to watch is UCLA senior Neal Delocono, 6-1, 222. He, too, had 86 tackles last season, 11 against Nebraska, and he is versatile enough to play on the inside.

The Cowboys of Oklahoma State possess a one-two punch in senior linebacker Matt Monger, 6-2, 215, and junior tackle Leslie O'Neal, 6-4, 235. Former Coach Jimmy Johnson called Monger "the most effective linebacker in the Big Eight Conference." He started as a walk-on. O'Neal had 21 tackles, caused a fumble and deflected a pass against Nebraska last season. Enough Syracuse defensive tackle Tim Green recorded 94 tackles and 14½ sacks in 1983.

Alabama hits with double gusto, too, with senior outside linebacker Emanuel King, 6-4, 234, and sophomore outside linebacker Cornelius Bennett, 6-4, 215. Coach Ray Perkins says, "I think they are the two best outside linebackers on any team in the nation."

Since Nebraska is such a source for comparison, it stands to reason the Cornhuskers have an ace. He is senior safety Bret Clark, 6-2, 190, who broke up the pass in the end zone that preserved a 14-10 win over, guess who, Oklahoma State.

Clark is attempting to take up some slack created when All-Big Eight linebacker Mike Knox sustained a knee injury. A gifted senior, Knox will not play this season.

Out of the Big Ten comes Iowa senior tackle Paul Hufford, 6-4, 265. He had 10 tackles last season against both Penn State and Michigan.

Yes, Penn State, which has junior Michael Zordich, 5-11, 201, at strong safety. He started at three different positions last season, outside linebacker and halfback the others. He had 11 tackles against Nebraska.

Michigan, which has never been easy to run against, has two seniors, middle guard Al Sincich, 6-1, 227, and tackle Kevin Brooks, 6-6, 245, returning. Sincich made eight tackles against Auburn in the Sugar Bowl, big numbers for a middle guard. Brooks runs the 40 in 4.7

seconds, which helps him chase down quarterbacks.

The people at North Carolina think senior linebacker Micah Moon, with 100 tackles last season, might be another Lawrence Taylor when it comes to making big plays. He is 6-1, 230.

Senior end Ray Childress, 6-6, 266, has Texas A&M supporters up in arms. He had 117 tackles and felled 15 quarterbacks last season. His coach, Jackie Sherrill, is high on him.

Unless you have been out of the country for a long time, you know the Southeastern Conference always comes up with 'A' players.

Auburn received preseason mention as the probable national champion. One reason is senior linebacker Gregg Carr, 6-2, 206. He was stunning last season on the field and as one of the top students on campus. He has a 3.7 grade point average in engineering. He breaks down offenses. Another senior is strong at Auburn, tackle Ben Thomas, 6-4, 265. He is as mobile as he is large.

Up-and-coming Ole Miss has senior defensive end Freddie Joe Nunn, 6-5, 233. He is strong and fast, 4.57 in the 40, which has pro scouts at attention.

Georgia has senior linebacker Knox Culpepper, 6-1, 212. He had 166 tackles last season, when his average grade was a sparkling 90 percent.

Vanderbilt had senior safety Manuel

Senior tackle Chris Funk of Air Force, 6-4, 235, blocked two field goal attempts last season. One saved a 23-22 victory over Notre Dame.

Junior Mike Ruth of Boston College, 6-2, 254, might be the strongest player in the nation. He bench presses 530 pounds. He runs a 4.8 40, which is fast for a middle guard of his size.

Other defensive stars who rate mention include...

Eddie Robinson, mom, and apple pie. All good things American. More than the nation's winningest active collegiate football coach — part legend and all truth — Grambling University's Eddie Robinson is a hero.

And like all true heroes, he wears the mantle well.

With 313 win-notches on his belt, and only 11 gridiron victories away from surpassing Paul "Bear" Bryant's all-time collegiate win record, the 63-year-old Robinson's thoughts these days are only partly concerned with football wins and losses.

You see, legend or not, he still just wants to be Eddie Robinson.

"I worry about being a fake," he says. "I don't want to be so concerned about winning a ball game that I lose sight of a player's health or what football is all about. You just try to do right and do the best you can.

"Not everybody's going to like you and not everybody's going to hate you. I would rather have a man's respect. I would just like to be remembered as a good guy. A good American.

"I don't want to be any better than anybody else. But, of course, you have to play to win, and you have to want to be the best. I feel like a coach's life is a wide open book."

The book on Coach Eddie Robinson is far from being closed, and with his breaking of the "Bear's" mark all but certain, he won't say anything but good about his former friend and colleague.

Robinson and Bryant established a close rapport over the years and each enjoyed the other's mutual respect and admiration.

"I would try and talk about 'the record' with Coach Bryant, and all he would want to talk about was his tough schedule. He gave me an inkling of what this would be like.

"I don't even know if I'll be around that long," Robinson has said in the past when queried about someday — soon — being the all-time winningest college football coach.

"Time takes care of everything, and it will take care of that. These young coaches are playing me so tough. It's like the 'Ole West Days' — the Gunslinger Syndrome. Everybody's trying to beat the old master."

continued

Make no mistake about it, Robinson is as much a promotional genius as he is master of the X's and O's. Not only is he on the verge of setting a record he never expected to achieve, but he's also made that fact known to the entire sporting world.

That may be his greatest accomplishment.

Imagine if you will, the drive, the tenacity, the just plain hard work it took to transform tiny Grambling College — nestled in the hills of Northern Louisiana — into a 'big name' college football power.

Imagine that 43 years and 311 wins later he's back on the field, working as hard as ever at the only job he's had in his adult life.

And it's been said that America is lacking heroes.

Last fall, when Louisiana governor Dave Treen unveiled a name plate designating Grambling's $7.5 million stadium as Robinson Stadium, he did so via an act of the Louisiana Legislature.

That day, Robinson gave a rare public insight into the heart of a rare man.

"Things are happening today that usually never happen while a person is living," he told a large pre-game audience through intermittent tears. "They say a rose by any name would smell as sweet, but there's a difference when I look into your faces and see the well-wishers, the Grambling people and my friends and know I'm enjoying the scent, too.

"When you say Robinson Stadium, it has to mean every person who has played football here. This honor that's been bestowed on us is a great one. That we should have been thought worthy of this distinction gives us mixed emotions of humility and profound gratitude."

Robinson has had more than a few chances to better himself financially by leaving Grambling and moving on to richer pastures. Yet, he's never regretted not leaving, and even turned down a lucrative offer from the late Los Angeles Rams' owner Carroll Rosenbloom to coach that team.

Obviously, money isn't all that matters to the man.

"At this stage of the game, when you've lived what I'd call a full life," he says, "you can have all the money in the world and not be happy. The things the ball players say about our relationship and what it has meant to them, that's all the pay I need. Those guys, when they come back and say 'Eddie Robinson meant a lot to me' — money couldn't buy that. How the guys think about me means so much."

The Eddie Robinson one sees on television and reads about is the same in person. Whether he's stopping spring football practice to speak to a group of junior high footballers or going out of his way to put a young sportswriter at ease, he's the same Eddie Robinson who's survived so many football wars.

"I don't ever want to lose my equilibrium and feel that because I won a ball game I'm better than anybody else," he asserts. "I didn't block or tackle anybody. There are people who have made greater contributions than I have ever made and ever will make, but they are in a field where they never get the recognition."

Robinson has sent over 200 players into the professional football ranks, including 32 players currently playing in the National, United States and Canadian Football Leagues. The list of ex-Tiger football players now playing their trade in the pros includes Doug Williams, Trumaine Johnson, Charlie Joiner, Everson Walls and Sammy White.

Among those who have played for Robinson in the past are Hall of Famers Willie Davis and Willie Brown, Paul "Tank" Younger, James Harris, Buck Buchanan and Rosey Taylor.

The academic success and athletic achievements of his players are of equal importance to Robinson. "What we're really hoping for is to send them home with degrees. This is very important to me. I tell them all the time that they can be whatever they want to be if they are willing to work hard enough."

When the G-Men take to the football field they aren't only playing a game, they're taking part in a Grambling family legacy, and Robinson strives to keep the tradition alive.

"I think you have to sell the legacy and tradition to the team. I think our team will try harder because they're from Grambling."

"I don't ever let them forget who they are, don't ever let them forget the people before them who wore the Black and Gold, and what they did and what they left for them," he says.

"They were good football players, good students, graduated and turned out to be good human beings. It all boils down to the fact that if you expect more from a person, you get more. You have to get him to understand that a lot is expected of him. It has to be that way. He has to learn how to produce."

"The way we really try to keep the legacy going is by letting a player know that the person who wore the number before him was an outstanding football player. I guess the whole thing is concern. You have to let a youngster know you're concerned about him and not just winning football games."

The late Bear Bryant, a legend at the University of Alabama, presented the Liberty Bowl Distinguished Service Award to Grambling Coach Eddie Robinson prior to the 1982 game.

The Grambling family Robinson speaks of is one that extends the boundaries of alumni and friends to include countless others who only know the man behind the Grambling name — Eddie Robinson.

Possibly no other college football team besides Notre Dame can honestly claim a nationwide following year-in and year-out. For reasons that have a lot to do with money and recruiting, the G-Men annually make stops in the nation's glamour cities.

New York, New Orleans, Los Angeles, Miami, Dallas. You name the place and Grambling has played it.

Like black sports greats Jessie Owens, Jack Johnson, Jackie Robinson, Wilma Rudolph, Hank Aaron and others before him, Eddie Robinson has tread uncharted ground.

There is something finite and absolute about the numbers on the scoreboards and record books that can't be denied.

That's the beauty of sports.

Undoubtedly, Eddie Robinson's life-journey has been a rewarding one to the many players, coaches, fans, students and others whose lives he has touched. He has built a life that's worth living.

"It's sort of incredible. I really don't know what to say," reflects Robinson about his and his school's success. "I'm one who feels anything can happen in America, but I never dreamed of this. One thing is certain, though — if I had to do it all over again, I'd do it right here at Grambling."

BANDS HAVE FORMATIONS, TOO

by Bill Althaus, Independence Examiner

What do a lollipop, machine gun and bird bath have in common with an I-formation, touchdowns or a forward pass?

Each item is an important ingredient in the pageantry that makes college football our nation's favorite autumn pastime.

While the backfield lines up in the

I-formation, the offense marches for a touchdown or the quarterback attempts a forward pass, hundreds of university band members are mentally rehearsing an intricate halftime show that might feature designs resembling — you guessed it! — a lollipop, machine gun or bird bath. Or perhaps the school's initials, a carousel or countless other formations.

The glamour surrounding collegiate marching bands has made halftime the most dazzling eight minutes in sports.

"You can't believe the number of hours that go into one halftime performance," a Midwest band director said. "Before the students even get the music or an instruction sheet, the music for that performance has to be written and arranged for the band.

"You then have to plot out the program, make copies and give them to the kids and make sure the instruments, percussion, flag carriers, baton twirlers and drum majors know exactly where to begin, and end.

"That," he added, "is all done before you start practicing four and-a-half hours a day after school starts."

And you thought Barry Switzer had it tough preparing a defense to stop the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

More than 100 hours go into that eight-minute performance. "More like hundreds of hours," the director said. "Hundreds and hundreds of hours. And it's worth every second."

Through the ages bands have sounded a call to arms and ushered in peace. When the crisp autumn air is filled with pigskins, one can bet a marching band is within listening distance. And today's marching bands offer the showmanship of a Broadway musical and vaudeville troupe rolled into one.

"I remember when I jumped on one of my kids for making a mistake," another band director said. "He told me 'I just made one mistake!' I then told him 'If all 300 members of this band make just one mistake we're going to have the worst program in the history of the school.' Can you imagine a performance where every member of the band takes a wrong turn, or bumps into the person in front of him? That's one of my nightmares, but luckily, it hasn't happened. Yet."

Football fans come to the stadium expecting perfection, from their team and the marching band. And perfection is usually what they get — at least from the band.

"Some universities have intensive workshops weeks before school starts," a musical director said. "We meet four days before school starts because we have 25 states represented in our band and we want the kids to keep their summer jobs and work as long as possible. We like to get the band members here a few days early so we can have rehearsals for the percussion and instrumental sections. We begin the Thursday before classes start. We have an intensive orientation on Friday — to make sure the kids know their right foot from their left — and we meet for six hours over the weekend.

"We then meet for one and-a-half hours a day, four days a week during school. The shows you see at the half of our games don't happen by mistake. It's an art."

Ask any football fan to name a legendary coaching innovator and he might mention Paul "Bear" Bryant, Amos Alonzo Stagg or Bud Wilkinson. Those men were not in a class by themselves, although, as former Houston Oilers' coach Bum Phillips said of former Texas running great Earl Campbell, "It don't take long to call role."

The same can be said for an elite class of band directors who built the foundation for today's halftime extravaganza.

BANDS HAVE FORMATIONS, TOO

ganzas. They were men like Ohio State University Professor Eugene J. Weigel, who in 1936 utilized a technique to write out in script the word "Ohio," which has since become the school's trademark. Then there was Dr. Albert Austin Harding, who helped the University of Illinois marching band gain its reputation for excellence. He took over a band of 55 pieces in 1905 and built what "March King" John Phillip Sousa called "the greatest college band in the country."

It was Harding who originated band clinics and introduced acapella singing (without instruments) on the football field.

Under the skillful leadership of William D. Revelli, the University of Michigan marching band has become what many conductors call "the model band." The organization features the Wolverine Marching Band, Varsity Band and Concert Band and totals more than 300 members.

"There have been many great band directors, just like there have been many great football or basketball coaches," a Northwest band director said. "When marching bands were conceived at the turn of the century, they were introduced, marched onto the field and played their song. They would then do an about face and march off the field. That would seem pretty dull by today's standards."

Added a Midwest director: "We have a photo on the wall of our band office showing the 1917 band forming a circle. That was pretty far out at that time."

Today, that's as routine as a fullback diving over the middle of the line on a short yardage play. Today's band directors gain knowledge and expertise from clinics, seminars, books, photographing or videotaping bands, or mapping out new formations much like an architect designs a skyscraper.

Most bands fall into one of two categories: corps style or rapid-tempo, which is also called the Big Ten band style. The corps-style band is represented by long strides and swinging arm movements. The visual effect depends upon the precision with which each move is executed. When the technique is perfected, even moving down the field in a single column is spectacular. The corps-style band usually selects a marching tempo, much like those used by military bands. In the United States this tempo is usually 120 beats or steps per minute. Sometimes the beat is increased to accentuate the band's entrance or exit. All maneuvers are conceived within this framework. This type of band represents dignity in the military tradition while the emphasis is usually placed on the correct posture and marching procedure. This band will rely heavily on the marching routine for a major portion of the halftime show.

The rapid-tempo program is more of a show business approach to entertaining football fans. Its roots lie in vaudeville and Broadway production numbers. The music is accompanied by baton twirlers and flag carriers who enhance the music with dance numbers. The rapid-tempo band often maintains an exhaustive 180 to 220 beats per minute. Band members appear to be moving at a trot, moving their instruments in time with the drum cadence or musical selection.

"The Big Ten style offers a lot of rah-rah," one director said. "And there's nothing wrong with that. It's powerful and features a lot of high stepping, precision marching and intricate designs."

"But I prefer the corps style with its glide step (where band members glide, rather than making exaggerated knee lifts). We will make our entrance, get into position and use our opening number to present our style — whether it be Dixie Land, somber, classical or pop. We'll have little movement on our next number and present a show-type atmosphere. We will use the color guard or flag carriers to present a show within a show.

"The third number is the percussion feature and we'll reach our climax with our show-stopping fourth number. You want to start softly and build to an exciting finale."

As one band member puts it: "You want to leave the crowd begging for more. Leaving the field while 70,000 people stand and cheer is an unbelievable feeling. You really can't describe it. We may never score a touchdown or kick an extra point, but Saturday afternoons wouldn't be the same without the band."

A musical director agrees.

"There are no scores for bands, so you never really know who wins or loses when you have two schools' bands performing at halftime," he said.

continued

continued

Today's marching bands offer the showmanship of Broadway and a vaudeville troupe rolled into one.

"But the one thing I love about working with members of the band is that each student believes he or she belongs to the best band in the world. And that's the way it should be."

Several decades ago, a Michigan University band drum major tossed his baton over the goal post prior to a big game, touching off a stunt that was duplicated across the country. A tradition now exists at Ann Arbor that at each football game a drum major must throw his baton high into the air and catch it if the Michigan team is to win.

That tradition has become a part of collegiate football, much like the tradition marching bands now enjoy. University bands have marched into the hearts of young and old from the rocky coast of Cape Cod to the sandy beaches of California.

Marching bands set the tone for an afternoon of combat where participants wear shoulder pads and helmets and include quarterback options and post patterns in their arsenal.

But for that moment when the gladiators are off the field, the crowd's attention turns to the band.

"When I hear music, I fear no danger. I am invulnerable. I see no foe." No, those aren't the words of Woody Hayes. They were written by Henry David Thoreau more than a century ago. It's questionable whether he might have been a football fan. But imagine his delight with the wonders of the 20th century marching band.

It's a magical moment that springs eternal each fall.

Eleven former All-America football players have been named to the National Football Foundation's College Football Hall of Fame for 1984. The selection of new members is based on "performance on the football field, good citizenship, and success in their chosen profession after their playing days ended," according to the Foundation.

Lance Alworth starred as a University of Arkansas halfback from 1956-61. He helped lead the Razorbacks to a 25-8 record during his three years, which brought the team a Southwest Conference title and two shared titles, plus three bowl invitations. Alworth became the first U of A athlete to letter in three varsity sports in a single school year — football, track and baseball. He was unanimous All-SWC as Arkansas' leading rusher in his junior year and was named that year, for the second time, to the All-SWC Academic team. In Alworth's last season he became an All-America, was named unanimous All-SWC again, led the nation for the second straight year in punt returns, won the SWC Sportsmanship Award, was elected president of the senior class at Arkansas, played in the College All-America game and the College All-Star game, and was signed as the No. 1 draft choice of the San Diego Chargers. Today he is president of his own company in San Diego, California.

Warren Amling played at guard-tackle for Ohio State University from 1944-46. The 1944 team is considered one of the more unusual and popular squads in the school's history. Most of its members were 17-year-old freshmen who were too young to be drafted and 4-F's who could not serve in WWII for physical reasons. Yet the team won all of its games that season, and in '45—the year Amling made All-America at guard—it lost only two. The 1946 Buckeye team, captained by Amling, finished 4-3-2, but Amling's play at tackle—at a relatively small 200 pounds—was so outstanding that he was selected All-America for the second straight year. Following his graduation from the College of Veterinary Medicine at OSU, Amling began a practice in London, Ohio. He is a successful veterinarian today.

Sam Chapman was the University of California, Berkeley's star halfback from 1935-37. Chapman, one of the men responsible for the great Cal "Thunder Teams," was a unanimous All-America as a senior and aided the Bears in achieving a 13-0 victory over Alabama in the '38 Rose Bowl. He was also an All-America college baseball player and after graduating signed a pro baseball contract—the second man ever to graduate from college and play regularly with a major league team. In 1941 Chapman volunteered for the Navy and became a fighter pilot. He is now an industrial air pollution inspector in San Francisco and is active in several charitable organizations in the Bay Area.

A Princeton University tackle from 1948-50, Holland Donan was a two-time All-America under Coach Charles Caldwell. Caldwell called him "the greatest tackle I have ever coached." Donan, who was also named All-East and All-Ivy in 1949, was an important reason for Princeton's domination of Ivy League football in '49 and '50. A defensive specialist, he saw limited action on offense and for two seasons handled the Tigers' kick-off duties. "Hollie" served in the Army for two years during the Korean war, then became a successful insurance account executive in New York City.

Charles Greene was a stand-out tackle for North Texas State University from 1965-68. "Mean Joe" won All-America acclaim as a senior on five different all-star teams and helped his team to a 23-5-1 record, along with the nation's best defensive record, during his playing years. The 6-4, 275-pounder later became a top professional football tackle and one of the sport's most colorful figures. With the world champion Pittsburgh Steelers, Greene won all-pro honors six years. He also won a Clio Award for his acting in a Coca-Cola commercial on television and was a color analyst for CBS Sports for one season. Greene is now a member of his alma mater's Board of Regents and is in the restaurant business in Texas.

Quarterback Bob Griese played for Purdue University from 1963-66. He won All-America acclaim his junior and senior years and was runner-up to Steve Spurrier in the Heisman Trophy balloting in 1966. Griese capped his college career by taking the Boilermakers to a 14-13 victory over Southern California in the exciting 1967 Rose Bowl. He went on to quarterback the Miami Dolphins for 14 seasons, leading the team to 101 of its 135 victories before a shoulder injury forced his retirement. Today he is a weekend football analyst for NBC television and runs an insurance business.

William Hartman, Jr., was a back for the University of Georgia from 1934-37. He became All-SEC and All-America as a fullback and linebacker, and returned kicks and handled punting duties. During Hartman's college days, team members played on both the offensive and defensive squads. Hartman, who captained the Bulldogs his senior year, made a 93-yard run in his final game versus Georgia Tech to tie the contest. He played a year of pro football, then was Georgia's backfield coach for four years. Retiring from coaching in 1956, Hartman spent several years in the insurance business. He returned to coaching in 1972 as a volunteer kicking coach for his alma mater, a position he continues to hold. Hartman also heads the university's Capital Fund Drive.

Edgar Kenna played for the University of Mississippi as a back in 1941, then received an appointment to the U.S. Military Academy. From 1942-44, he was a halfback and QB for Coach "Red" Blaik's team. Kenna was an All-America in 1944 and also found time to be president of his class, cadet captain and regimental commander. After a three-year tour of duty in Germany, he coached at the Point. Kenna later worked as a top executive in several corporations and today is a partner in a New York City company.

University of Nebraska halfback Robert Reynolds lettered each of his three years of football—1949-52—and also won three varsity letters in baseball. As a soph, Reynolds led the nation in scoring with 157 points and in touchdowns with 22, to set an NCAA record that season. His 17.4 points per game still stands as an NCAA record. Reynolds, whose 6.9 yards per carry helped him gain All-America acclaim, was hampered by injuries as a junior and senior, ending hopes of his winning the Heisman Trophy. Today Reynolds is a partner in his own insurance company in Omaha, Nebraska and is active in civic and community affairs.

Joe Romig, who played at guard for the University of Colorado from 1958-61, was an outstanding athlete and student. He was a two-time consensus All-America and in 1961 was UPI Lineman of the Year as well as captain of the Buffaloes. Romig was named a National Football Foundation Hall of Fame Scholar Athlete as a senior and in 1969 was named to the All-Time Big Eight Conference Team. He majored in physics at Colorado and was awarded Danforth and Woodrow Wilson scholarships, as well as a Rhodes Scholarship. After receiving his master's at Oxford, England, Romig returned to his alma mater to acquire a doctorate in astrophysics, obtaining that degree in 1975. He is now a senior research associate in radiophysics in Boulder, Colorado and teaches part-time at the University of Colorado.

Charles Taylor is the only man to be honored as both a player and coach at Stanford University's Athletic Hall of Fame. As a guard under head coach Clark Shaughnessy from 1940-42, Chuck earned all-coast honors with the famous "Wow Boys" squad which defeated Nebraska, 21-13, in the 1941 Rose Bowl. He was named first team all-coast three consecutive years, was a unanimous All-America pick in '42 and played in the 1943 East-West Shrine All-Star game. Taylor served three years in the Navy during WWII, then returned to The Farm to coach the freshman football, rugby and wrestling teams, becoming the Cardinals' head football coach in '51. During that period he also played a year of pro football and was a San Francisco 49ers line coach for a season. Taylor was named Coach of the Year for his first Stanford team's 9-2 record, which earned them an invitation to the 1952 Rose Bowl. In seven seasons his coaching record was 40-29-2. Taylor became the Cards' athletic director in 1963, serving eight years in that capacity. Today Taylor is chairman of the West selection committee for the East-West Shrine game and operates a summer mountain camp for teenagers.

College Cheerleading National Championship

University of Utah cheerleading squad.

What makes the College Cheerleading National Championship such an exciting event? Enthusiastic young cheerleaders... dazzling gymnastic routines... school spirit... good sportsmanship. The 1983-84 Championship, held on January 10, 1984, and televised in a one-hour ESPN special later that month, showcased all of this and more.

The competition is sponsored by the Ford Motor Division of Ford Motor Company and sanctioned by Universal Cheerleaders Association, one of the country's foremost training organizations for college cheerleaders. It is open to all 270 NCAA Division I colleges and universities, 105 of which were eligible and submitted the required three-minute videotape of a continuous, unedited routine performed during a home basketball or football game at half-time or before the game. GALE SAYERS

by Bob Hentzen, Topeka Capital-Journal

No way does it seem that long ago. But it's been more than 20 years since Gale Sayers played college football. Why, it's been more than a dozen since he played pro football.

There are, no doubt, players on the field today—and students watching in the stands—who have no more than a hazy recollection, if that, of the back they called The Kansas Comet. That's a shame.

You even see his name in print now as Gayle Sayers or Gale Sayres. Nobody that good should ever have his name misspelled, although his old coach, Jack Mitchell, always pronounced it "Sayer" when he was talking with the press or alumni.

Sayers never won the Heisman Trophy. He never played on a Big Eight Conference championship team. He never trotted on the field for a bowl game. That's a shame, too, because he was one of the best to ever play the game—a rare 6-1, 190-pound package of speed, moves and power.

These days Sayers has his own company, Computer Supplies by Sayers, in Northbrook, Ill. He's not directly involved in college athletics. That, in a way, is a shame also.

The good part is that Sayers has no regrets about playing on what were mediocre teams during his college career at Kansas. "No way," he responds when asked if he wishes he'd gone elsewhere. "I think of Kansas a lot. I'd do it all over again. It was a tremendous experience."

Let's go back to 1960, when Sayers wound up an illustrious high school career in Omaha, Neb. Today it's almost unheard of for a Nebraska prep star to turn down a scholarship from the premier program Tom Osborne has nurtured at the University of Nebraska. But this was 24 years ago.

"Nebraska had a losing season every year I was in high school," remembers Sayers. "My No. 1 school then was Iowa. That's really where I wanted to go. Jerry Burns was the coach and he had a wide-open offense."

But Sayers wasn't destined to become

The Iowa Comet. His visit to the Iowa campus was discouraging. "Henry Carr, a world-class sprinter, was there the same weekend," recalls Sayers. "I did not see Burns one time the whole weekend. He was busy recruiting Henry Carr. That turned me off."

"It boiled down to Nebraska and Kansas, although I had 110 offers. Bill Jennings, the Nebraska coach, was low key and they had been losing. I guess I chose Kansas for two people. In a way, it had nothing to do with football."

The first person was Kansas assistant Tom Triplett, who recruited in the Omaha area. "He was a very unusual man," says Sayers. "I never met anybody like him."

The second was the Jayhawks' head man, Mitchell, a former split-T quarterback at Oklahoma. "I loved Jack Mitchell," Sayers says. "Maybe he wasn't that good of a coach. But he was a tremendous recruiter. He could psyche players into doing about anything."

tapes, rating the squads according to group technique, crowd appeal, overall effect, communication and projection. Scoring is based on a 100-point system, with the eight squads that came nearest the maximum qualifying as finalists.

Those eight finalists, who would go to Honolulu, included four regional winners from each of the nation's geographic regions and four at-large squads—those which, regardless of region, placed most closely behind the regional winners. The schools chosen were: Boston College from the Northeast; the University of Kentucky from the South; Ohio State University from Mid-America (last year's winner); the University of Utah from the West; Louisiana State University; North Carolina State University; the University of Alabama and the University of South Carolina.

The competition has doubled in popularity in the cheerleading community since last year's contest, when the enrollment was 50 schools—the 1983-84 entry enrollment was 105. For the privilege of participating in the Championship, college squads practice long hours—usually at least 12 hours a week for several weeks before the competition. As the football season is one of their busiest, it's often difficult for the squads to find time to practice, but these young people and their coaches are dedicated.

As cheerleading has graduated to the level of organized sport, professional training for college squads has become increasingly common. Universal Cheerleaders Association, founded in 1975, provides instruction to squads from 270 colleges and universities around the country. From 12 camps teaching 6,000 students, UCA has grown to 150 camps with 40,000 students in 1984. It also runs 147 high school cheerleading camps and has held an annual high school championship since 1979. UCA has training camps for pompon squads, drill teams and even for school mascots.

One of the main goals of cheerleading is to increase the home field advantage by actively linking fans to their teams. Cheerleaders, with their yells, chants and routines, try to create through crowd participation a stronger motivation for the home players to do their best. UCA teaches cheerleaders simple yells which are easy for fans to repeat. Also, squads are taught to perform in a tightly structured format so that no opportunity is lost to cheer and no sign of disorganization appears. The modern approach to cheerleading emphasizes gymnastics and the creation of original and athletic routines. At UCA, instructors include expert gymnasts such as Steve Elliott, 1982 NCAA gymnastic-floor exercise and vaulting champion.

Their athletic prowess, creativity and hard work brought three cheerleading squads top honors at the College Cheerleading National Championship last January. Taking first place was the University of Alabama; in second place was Louisiana State University; and the University of Utah took third place.

College cheerleading squads are already preparing for the 1984-85 Championship, to be held in January, 1985. In fact, the squad leading cheers for your team today may be a contender for honors in the Championship. So raise your voice and yell along with those cheerleaders.

University of Alabama cheerleading squad.

"Tom and Jack came to recruit me and they did a great job. They are two people I will always remember. Curtis McClinton and John Hadl also helped. They said they'd be leaving and they told me about Doyle Schick and Bert Coan leaving. They convinced me that I'd have the opportunity to play as a sophomore. It didn't hurt that Kansas was coming off a winning season."

Sayers, like so many freshmen away from home for the first time, found his first days in college bewildering.

"I wasn't ready to be on a college campus with 14,000 or 15,000 students," he says. "It was foreign to me. I was very, very shy then. I was getting ready to get married. I was homesick. But Jesse Milan (a local booster) helped me through some rough spots. There were a lot of good people in Lawrence. Mike Shinn, my roommate, was from Topeka and he helped me adjust to Kansas."

Soon it was time to play football. The varsity, sparked by the likes of Hadl and McClinton, were embarking on a successful season that was to end with a victory in the Bluebonnet Bowl. But attention in the Sunflower State also was on the two games played by the Jayhawk freshman team.

It was in those games that one burden, the fear of failure, was lifted from Sayers. "I lived up to my expectations," he remembers. That he did, scoring all of Kansas' six touchdowns in the two games and averaging nearly eight yards a carry.

Sayers made his varsity debut on Sept. 22, 1962, against Texas Christian. It was a preview of things to come. He ran for 114 yards on 27 carries and added a 44-yard kickoff return. Kansas lost, 6-3.

The most spectacular performance of his college career—it was a bizarre game and bittersweet experience personally for Sayers—came a month later. The Jayhawks were trailing Oklahoma State 17-7 at halftime in Stillwater and playing so poorly that Mitchell disgustingly ignored his team during the intermission.

But at the finish, Kansas was a 36-17 winner and Sayers had broken the Big Eight single-game rushing record with 283 yards on a modest 22 carries. At the finish, Sayers also was crestfallen because he had been ejected from the game.

The strange turn of events started when, with five minutes left, Sayers was tackled late out of bounds after a 15-yard run. He came up swinging and was ejected. But Mitchell wasn't aware of it and sent Sayers back on the field when word came down from the press box that he was in reach of the record of 271 yards held by Iowa State's Dave Hoppman.

And with 32 seconds left, Sayers broke for 15 more yards—at which time the officials realized that he shouldn't have been in the game. A heated discussion followed before referee Pat Haggerty, now one of the NFL's best, assured Mitchell that Sayers' run would count. That was confirmed by the Big Eight the next day.

Sayers' totals that afternoon included a 96-yard touchdown gallop, but he lost a 67-yard touchdown when his foot touched the chalk after 33 yards. Another 22-yard effort was wiped out by a penalty. Still, that record was to stand for 10 years before another mighty fine Big Eight back, Oklahoma's Greg Pruitt, broke it.

There were so many other Sayers spectaculars at Kansas. He went 99 yards against Nebraska and 81 against Wyoming as a junior and 77 against Kansas State as a senior. He also swept 93 yards on a kickoff return against Oklahoma in his senior campaign.

But the Jayhawks muddled through 6-3-1, 5-5 and 6-4 seasons when Sayers was wearing No. 48. "This is a problem Kansas has had a whole lot," Sayers observes. "It's always had great athletes, but not enough of them. It was probably like it is at Kansas now. You can't win with one athlete. You've got to have a collection of stars. Kansas never has had enough."

Sayers' sophomore season, when he gained 1,125 yards in 158 carries, was the springboard for the All-America honors that he received the next two years. But that was his lone 1,000-yard rushing season at Kansas. He gained 917 yards in 132 carries as a junior and 633 yards in 138 carries as a senior.

"I don't know why," he says of the dwindling statistics. "I imagine it's because we were a senior-dominated team my sophomore year. When I was a junior and senior, we had more underclassmen. And Jack used me as a decoy a lot my senior year. I didn't get the carries. A couple of times I had only five or six. I was used as a receiver."

Sayers, by the way, made solid academic strides in college. He missed by only eight units earning a degree in education after four years at KU. He returned to get his diploma, and education is still what he preaches when he talks to young athletes today. "I tell them they've got to prepare for tomorrow, to get their degrees, that not everybody can become a pro athlete," he says.

Sayers' football star exploded anew when he moved on to the Chicago Bears, who won a hot battle with the Kansas City Chiefs of the American Football League for his services.

His pro career lasted seven years, through 1971, and his name remains all over the record book. Sayers scored 22 touchdowns as a rookie in 1965, including six in one game. . . he led the league in rushing in 1966 and 1969. . . he averaged five yards for every pro carry. . . as a runner, receiver, return man and passer (left), he twice led the league in all-purpose yardage.

But, as at Kansas, Sayers couldn't do it all. The Bears never reached the Super Bowl. Again, Sayers has no regrets—he loved "Pappa Bear," George Halas—although his other pro option (the Chiefs) twice made the Super Bowl.

Sayers' ties have remained strong with the University of Kansas. As a pro, he'd give a high school prospect a call on Kansas' behalf. Later, he became an assistant athletic director at his alma mater, and now he occasionally pops into Lawrence for a game and to visit old friends.

Sayers happened to personally sign the back, Laverne Smith, who demoted him to the No. 2 spot on the school's career rushing list. But Smith had four years to amass 3,074 yards and Sayers but three to gain 2,675. John Riggins, a back still in the news, is close behind in third place.

Sayers never hankered to coach, but he did itch to become an athletic administrator at the college level. That goal proved to be almost as difficult to attain as it was for him to reach a college bowl or Super Bowl.

He was frustrated when Kansas twice hired new athletic directors when his name was in the hopper. "I love Kansas. I was at Kansas and I had a good name there," he says. "If I can't get a shot there, where can I get a shot?"

Sayers did eventually land the athletic director job at Southern Illinois, serving five years at the Missouri Valley school before resigning to go into business for himself. His absence from college athletics, though, may not be permanent.

"I love college athletics, but I don't think the timing is right even yet," he answers when asked if he wants back in. "If I wanted to go back, it would be as an administrator in a major program where you have a chance to be successful."

Cyclone Men Equipped to Defend Big Eight Cross Country Title

Last year's overall performance will be a tough act to follow. Iowa State's eighth-place finish in the NCAA Championships was the best in school history, and the second time in four years the Cyclones have cracked the top 10. Prior to the NCAA Championships, Iowa State won every scored meet in which it competed, including the Big Eight and NCAA District V Championships. The chances of duplicating last year's championship performances appear favorable considering that nearly everyone is returning.

Yobes Ondieki placed second nationally last season after winning the Big Eight and NCAA District V titles.

Yobes Ondieki became Iowa State's first cross country performer to capture the Big Eight individual title, as well as the NCAA District V crown. Ondieki's second-place finish nationally was the best ever by a Cyclone runner and earned him his first all-American award in cross country. He won every meet he ran, set four course records, and also established new all-time ISU five-mile and 10,000-meter bests.

Teammate Joseph Kipsang earned his second consecutive top-10 finish nationally. Kipsang, a senior, captured fourth after placing sixth in the 1982 national meet. He has also taken third and fourth in the 10,000-meter run at the past two NCAA Track and Field Championships.

"I can't say enough good things about Yobes and Joseph," said head coach Bill Bergan. "They gave us super efforts last season and once again proved they are among the best collegiate distance runners in the nation.

"We will have good quality again this year, but must keep everyone healthy to have a chance at winning another Big Eight title," Bergan predicted. "Ondieki, Kipsang, (Tim) Wakeland, (Raf) Wyns, (Paul) Black, and (Barnaba) Korir all have impressive credentials and should give us a good nucleus to build around."

Wakeland captured the individual title in his first collegiate competition at the Iowa State Open. He also placed among the top five in three other meets last season, and finished 15th in the Big Eight and 13th in the District V Championships. He highlighted his 1983 season by winning the national title in the 19-and-under division at The Athletic Congress (TAC) national cross country championships.

Korir is an outstanding middle distance prospect in track who should also be a top-five contender on the cross country squad. He finished third in the Kenyan provincial and district cross country meets. Black was considered one of the team's top five performers all of last season and enjoyed an outstanding indoor and outdoor track campaign in 1984, qualifying for England's Olympic Trials in the 1,500-meter run. He was Iowa State's second-highest placewinner at the NCAA District V cross country meet, finishing sixth.

Wyns, a junior, finished 48th at the NCAA Championships, and 17th at the Big Eight Championships. Another junior, newcomer Paul Richley placed third in the English School Championships and captured eighth place nationally.

Sophomore Bob Soule won the Iowa state prep cross country title as a senior at Sioux City Heelan and gained strength and experience last season. Freshman recruit Eric Gonstead won the state cross-country title in Wisconsin last season and set eight course records during his high school career. Sophomore Dean Piper, who ran in three meets last season, will also fight for a spot in the top five.

Joseph Kipsang captured fourth place in the 1983 NCAA Championships. He placed sixth nationally in 1982 and is also a two-time all-American in track.

CROSSWORD ANSWERS

Cyclone Gridders Protecting Healthy Knees with Braces

by Steve McLaughlin
Student Asst. Trainer

As you watch today's game you may notice that most of Iowa State's players are different from the opposition's players. It's not a physical difference, but a difference in equipment. Iowa State's players are wearing an additional piece of protective equipment. All defensive players except backs, and all offensive players except wide receivers have on knee braces. They don't all have injured knees, however. In fact, most of them have very healthy knees.

Iowa State Head Athletic Trainer Frank Randall says there are two reasons for the healthy knees.

"I credit the knee braces and our strength program," said Randall. "But I'd give the edge to the bracing because the legs may be hit in positions in which the strength of the muscle may be nullified."

Iowa State started using knee braces on their players during the fall of 1982. Since that time, no ISU gridders have suffered any serious knee injuries. Randall said there hasn't been a knee surgery for ligament damage performed in that time.

"Depending on the season, we probably averaged four to six knee surgeries a year before we started using the braces," Randall said. "Knee injuries seem to run in cycles, and we know there is a certain amount of luck involved. But we feel there is conclusive proof the knee braces have made a difference."

Last fall Iowa State suffered 21 knee injuries. But of those 21, only one was moderately severe, according to Randall. During spring drills there were 76 players wearing the braces and only four suffered knee injuries. All four were of a mild nature, according to Randall.

The brace ISU uses is made by American Prosthetics. Iowa State was the first school in the nation to use the brace and was instrumental in its development.

Each brace has two flexible plastic cuffs, one for the thigh and one for the shin area. The two cuffs are connected by two hinged uprights, one on each side of the knee. This is what makes the brace so unique. Most knee braces presently on the market have only one upright to protect the knee. The uprights feature a toothed double-hinged design to allow the knee freedom of movement. It is also extremely light, weighing only 12 ounces.

This was not always the case. When the brace was first developed by Harold Miller of American Prosthetics, it was made of heavier fiberglass. To fit a brace to a player's leg, a cast had to be made of his leg. The brace has now evolved to the lightweight flexible plastic. It now comes in three sizes and is fit according to each player's leg circumference. Several improvements in the brace have been made possible through research by Randall and his staff.

The braces are secured to the leg by elastic wraps and tape. The leg is first covered with the elastic wrap. The brace is then put in place and tape is used to secure it to the wrap. When the braces were first used, the players' weren't very receptive, but now most of them view the braces as an essential protective device, according to Randall.

Randall feels this type of brace will be very popular in the future. "I think you will see more schools using the bilateral brace because there is a better mechanism to protect the knee," he said.

The brace is starting to get some recognition from other schools. It is the same brace used by many of the University of Iowa players last spring, and is becoming popular at the high school level. It may not be too many more years and before every school Iowa State plays will be wearing braces as part of their regular uniform.

Drake University

Iowa's largest private university, with an enrollment of 4,700 full-time and 2,200 part-time students, is located in the heart of the state's largest city and state capital. The three-county area encompassing Des Moines boasts a population of almost 250,000 residents.

In 1881, representatives of the Christian Church Disciples of Christ, led by George Thomas Carpenter, journeyed to Des Moines in search of a suitable home for its economically troubled Oskaloosa College. There they found a number of welcome supporters, including General Francis Marion Drake, for whom the University is named.

Since opening its doors to 70 students that registered for the first semester of classes, the non-sectarian institution has developed into one of the finest private universities in the Midwest with a national reputation. Students can choose from more than 60 undergraduate major fields of study leading to 14 baccalaureate degrees as well as more than a dozen graduate degrees.

Drake University consists of eight schools and colleges — the Colleges of Business Administration, Education, Fine Arts, Liberal Arts and Pharmacy, and the Schools of Journalism, Law and Graduate Studies — in addition to offering courses through the College of Continuing Education.

During the past decade, many modern buildings have been added — Olmsted Center, a multi-purpose center for the entire University community; Harmon Fine Arts Center, one of the best fine arts facilities in the Midwest; Olin Hall of Biological Science; Cartwright Hall, home of Drake's Law School; and the Hill M. Bell Physical Education and Recreation Center.

Aliber Hall opened its doors in August of 1982. Drake's $5 million College of Business Administration building is part of the University's $25 million Second Century Fund program. Measuring 47,300 square feet, the three-story structure includes four accounting labs, a 154-seat lecture hall, a computer classroom and lab, and administration and faculty offices.

While intramural and intercollegiate athletics have been a part of Drake since the 1880's, it was not until John L. Griffith's arrival in 1908 that Drake enjoyed a strong athletic growth. As coach and athletic director, Griffith organized the "D" Club, and, in 1910, founded "America's Athletic Classic" — the Drake Relays.

Recent growth in Drake athletics resulted when men's and women's intercollegiate athletics were incorporated into one department during the summer of 1979. The department now includes intercollegiate participation in football, women's volleyball, men's and women's cross country, wrestling, men's and women's basketball, men's and women's track, men's and women's tennis, softball and men's golf.

The Excellence Continues

at Iowa State

The magnificent Iowa State Center . . . a striking addition to the Library . . . soon, a state-of-the-art Computation Center . . .

Campus visitors marvel at the dramatic growth of Iowa State's physical facilities. And we are justly proud that these extraordinary developments have come about in large measure through the efforts and generosity of alumni, friends, faculty, and students . . .

Yet the ISU Achievement Foundation's current Excellence in the Eighties fund drive is less about new buildings than it is about strengthening the heart of the university's academic programs.

Excellence in the Eighties will provide for an endowment to carry the university through cyclical economic changes . . . funds for replacing obsolete laboratory equipment . . . dollars for library books . . . financial support for students and incentives for teachers.

Great goals, all!

Already more than $45 million has been committed toward the five-year, $60 million goal.

Join us in this adventure, which will bring still more surprises to our visitors.

about our Hotel Management System

"I discovered the QANTEL Hotel & Leisure system while attending a trade show last year. I was very impressed. It was evident that HAL™ was written by hotel people for hotel people.

HAL clearly offered the operational control that's essential for a profitable hospitality business, as well as the flexibility to adapt to situations we might encounter years in the future. We bought the system and were operational in March with Front Office and Back Office modules, which include Reservations and Accounting. Thanks to HAL, we've never been more on top of things."

about our Retail Management System

"I used to spend a lot of my time commuting from store to store. Now I can efficiently operate most of my business from the QANTEL computer that sits on my desk.

With the QANTEL FRAME™ software, I can follow each of our six stores, category by category, with Monthly Profit Profiles. I can also condense my stock of over 2,000 plus items into 50 key items, and determine, with a Hot and Cold Report, which ones to keep or drop. I can even get print-outs of sizes in a format that conforms to the footwear industry. FRAME has given me the vision to see future possibilities."

For Hoteliers, Retailers, Manufacturers, Sports and Transit Management, MDS Qantel offers industry-specific solutions that work.

FLY WITH THE EAGLES

THIS YEAR'S FASTEST PONTIAC HAS ONLY ONE TIRE —EAGLE VR.

Ask a group of car experts what's the best performance tire in the world.

Chances are, one name will dominate the conversation—Eagle VR.

Now that tire—the tire that has helped the new Corvette achieve "...absolutely astonishing limits of grip..." according to Road & Track—has been selected sole original equipment tire on Pontiac's 1984 Anniversary Trans Am.

And no other high-performance radial combines Eagle VR's unidirectional tread pattern, long tread wear, steel-belted toughness and smooth ride with VR (130 MPH) speed rating.

It seems that more and more, the builders of the world's finest performance cars are using our new Eagle VR's.

And that suits us just fine.

The Goodyear Eagle VR radial. In the Eagles' Nest at your Goodyear retailer.

Eddie "The Kid" LeBaron led College of the Pacific to a 30-7-2 record during his three seasons.

Eddie LeBaron

by Tony Sauro, Stockton Record

John Rohde remembers it well. World War II had ended, the future looked bright and it was time to play football again.

As practice for the 1946 season began at College of the Pacific, even the team manager looked like a winner.

Which was a good thing.

The "manager" turned out to be the quarterback.

"We all thought he was the manager," said Rohde. "He was 16. But he looked like he was 10."

He was Eddie LeBaron, still one of the smallest men ever to achieve so much in college football.

And he did it all as a teen-ager.

"I wasn't that small, really," said LeBaron, whose 5-7, 160-pound frame earned him a Bunyonesque reputation in the late 1940s. "It was my age more than anything else that seemed to get all the attention."

"He was one-in-a-million to be as young as he was and do what he did," said Rohde, who caught dozens of LeBaron's passes and blocked for him as a tight end in COP's sleight-of-hand T-formation offense. "We called him 'Kid' most of the time because that's what he was."

He was "Kid," child prodigy and boy genius all combined into one whirling dervish of activity, as he led his tiny school — COP's enrollment was 868 in those days — to a 30-7-2 record during three-plus seasons of now-you-see-him-now-you-don't antics.

"When you looked back, you never saw Eddie," said Rohde. "You just saw the ball coming out from behind all those big linemen. He could really fake."

By the time LeBaron had faked out his last opponent in 1949, he had become an All-America and an all-star. He was 19 years old.

"On the football field, it never really entered my mind much," said LeBaron, who now leads the Atlanta Falcons of the NFL as their 54-year-old executive vice-president. "I never really thought that much about it. My age didn't matter on the field."

Rohde and the rest of LeBaron's teammates thought about it a lot.

While LeBaron was speeding through grade school and high school in the tiny town of Oakdale in California's fertile San Joaquin Valley — "I started high school when I was 12" — Rohde and most of LeBaron's other teammates were serving in the military during World War II.

That created an early version of the Generation Gap when they got together at COP.

"We had guys on those teams who were 28 and 29 years old. I was 22 as a freshman," said Rohde, who became the school's head coach for three years (1961-63) and now is a businessman in Sacramento. "The team's average age? Gosh, it had to be 26. He took a ribbing. We were always setting him up against other guys, trying to measure him. It was a lot of fun. But we felt sorry for him sometimes, because he was so young and going through school with older guys. You know, he'd get serious about girls and they'd think he was too young.

"But, on the field, he could do anything."

After an outstanding career at Oakdale High, LeBaron arrived at COP largely unrecruited and considered way too small. "A lot of the big schools said 'No way. He's too small,'" said Rohde.

Amos Alonzo Stagg, in the twilight of a legendary coaching career, didn't.

"Mr. Stagg" — as LeBaron still calls him — made LeBaron the tailback in his single-wing offense at COP. LeBaron missed the first three games of his freshman season after having his appendix removed. Twenty days after the operation, he started and played 59 minutes in a 26-13 loss to Pappy Waldorf's Northwestern team.

He never stopped starting after that, eventually leading COP to an 11-0 season and, amazingly, the No. 10 ranking in the nation (Associated Press) as a 19-year-old senior in 1949. That "point-a-minute" team outscored its opponents 577-66 and won by scores of 88-0 (Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo); 75-0 (Hawaii); 52-0 (Loyola, Calif.); 75-20 (Portland); and 62-14 (San Diego State).

After helping the 84-year-old Stagg win his final (as in 314th) game in 1946, LeBaron became a quarterback in name as a sophomore. Larry Siemering took over for the retiring Stagg and installed a T-formation offense that capitalized on LeBaron's quickness, superior intelligence and Houdini-like ball-handling skills in a wildly experimental way. COP went 28-2-2 between 1947-49.

"He was a little guy among big men," said Siemering, who won 88 percent of his games (35-5-3) in four years at COP and now is retired and living in the coastal California town of Aptos. "Who said he was too small? They all said it. I didn't. He always came up with the big play. He was easily coached, very receptive, very appreciative. He was the same in every game. He wasn't easily depressed. Oh, yes. He was No. 1."

LeBaron still is No. 1 at University of the Pacific—the Stockton, Calif., school that used to be called COP and never has matched the LeBaron-era success.

The school's annual football award for academic excellence is named after him and he still leads the Tigers' career charts in passing yardage (3,841), touchdowns (49) and total offense (3,900). A starting defensive safety when he wasn't manufacturing offensive touchdowns, he also ranks 10th in school history in career pass interceptions (10). He'd be up there in punting, too, if such records had been kept. In the era of single-platoon football, LeBaron did it all.

Ironically, he doesn't recall his size being a major issue when it came to playing professional football. "It wasn't an issue until after two or three years," he said. He resolved the age issue by winning a Bronze Star and Purple Heart as a Marine lieutenant in the Korean War before trying pro football. He played seven seasons with the Washington Redskins (1952-59) and three with the fledgling Dallas Cowboys (1960-63). After practicing law for 13 years in Texas and Nevada, he joined the Falcons in 1977 as general manager.

With the draft, the Super Bowl goal and dozens of other details occupying his considerable energies in the 1980s, LeBaron reflects warmly on those comparatively tranquil, idyllic college days:

"I guess what I remember most is that we had a great football team the last three years. We were basically all from right around Stockton. We had great camaraderie and great talent. We had great closeness and great confidence in our abilities. I started it from the center. But everybody had a big part in what we did."

A humble, gracious individual, he earned the loyalty of older men as much with his selfless attitude as his remarkable athletic skills.

In a way, he looks for Eddie LeBaron types as he scours college campuses for NFL talent in the modern era. Asked what one quality enabled him to rise above bigger, stronger and older men as a college teen-ager, he responds diplomatically:

"Well, everyone who becomes successful has at least two or three strong qualities: talent, determination and intelligence or some combination of those that makes them special."

Or as his old buddy Rohde says, his voice brimming with obvious pride and a degree of reverence, "He could do anything. He did it his way."

LeBaron (#40) was known for his quickness, intelligence and skilled ball-handling.

Listen carefully. You just might hear a faint "growl" as you approach the new 300 ZX Turbo.

Because this is one machine not meant to stand still—it's a machine designed to move...in ways reserved for just a handful of cars worldwide.

The remarkably sophisticated, turbo-charged, V-6 engine wrings 200 horsepower from just 181 cubic inches; at 227 ft/lbs., torque is just short of unbelievable.

How does Nissan harness all this power? The 300 ZX boasts a newly designed, fully independent suspension: McPherson struts upfront, expanded—span trailing arms aft. This new geometry provides near-flat cornering and reduces roll to a memory...for a sense of control that feels absolute.

The new 300 ZX Turbo—an extraordinary blend of challenging performance and incomparable luxury.

The metropolises of Lubbock, Texas and Boone, N.C., host, respectively, Texas Tech University and Appalachian State University.

There isn't much similarity between the two sports programs. Texas Tech, in a city with a population of about 180,000, plays Division I-A football in the prestigious Southwestern Conference. Appalachian State, in a town of about 11,000 people, plays Division I-AA football in the Southern Conference.

One thing they shared was an athletic administrator. He was at Texas Tech when that school came up with a brilliant idea to encourage high schoolers to walk on and play football at Tech. With imitation being the sincerest form of flattery, he put the same idea to good use when he moved to Appalachian State.

The Texas Tech sports information department dressed up a toddler in a Tech football jersey and gave him a football helmet to lug around. They made a poster of the youth with a classic caption: "Some people just can't wait to walk on at Texas Tech." When the administrator got his job at Appalachian State, he proposed to do the same thing. The football staff loved the idea and came up with a poster of their own.

The posters at both schools were successful, both as collectors' items and recruiting tools. Both schools have reported a marked increase in quality walk-on players joining their programs.

At one time there was no problem getting players to walk on to play football. That's because, in the early days of the sport, every player was a walk-on—a player who didn't receive financial remuneration to play. There were no scholarships for sports then. Football was merely an after-school activity, a chance to represent the good ol' alma mater on the gridiron.

All that changed with the advent of the athletic scholarship as college football became a big-time business. Scholarship grants gradually reached a high of 120. There were still walk-ons, but there were so many players on scholarship at that point it was tough for a walk-on to make an impact. But the walk-on has regained a prominent role since scholarship limits were reduced from 120 to 95 for major universities.

"I could not run my program without walk-ons," said one western head coach matter-of-factly. "I need about 100 players to run practice the way I like to run it. Through attrition you never have your full complement of on the back of the shoes. Walk-ons usually wore cut-rate shoes, often having to purchase the shoes themselves.

At the same school, the new adage is you can always tell a walk-on by his head. To be a little more specific, you lack size, for example, coming out of high school can work wonders in a fully-equipped weight room. It's nice to have all the tools coming in, but they can be developed, too."

There are hundreds of walk-ons starting each year across the country. Suc-

At some schools walk-on players are undistinguished, but in other cases telltale signs such as three-digit numbers on the back of helmets are an indication.

scholarship athletes anyway, so you've got to have walk-ons. Without good ones, our practices could not run smoothly."

Because of their value, walk-ons get better treatment these days. "At our school," said an assistant coach from the Midwest, "our players don't know who is on scholarship or who's a walk-on because everyone gets treated the same. We're proud of that and that's a big reason why we get good walk-ons." That wasn't always the case in the past. Walk-ons often received the worst equipment and were last in line for treatment of injuries, along with not having a scholarship or being able to eat at the training table.

At one southwestern school, the old adage was you could always tell a walk-on by his shoes. The scholarship players, you see, had special shoes with the school's nickname on the Achilles tab can determine who is a walk-on by checking his helmet. He has the same high-quality gear as the scholarship players, but the giveaway is on the back of the helmet. If there is a three-digit number back there, you've found yourself a walk-on.

"We've made it a point to upgrade our walk-on program, to give walk-ons the same gear and treatment everyone else gets," the head coach said. "They are out there busting their butts every day of the week for us and I don't think it's fair to single them out."

Are there walk-on success stories? One midwestern power estimates that about 20 players a year on its roster are walk-ons who have since earned scholarships.

"It's not that rare for a walk-on to succeed," said one southwestern coach. "College football, more than ever, is a developmental thing. A walk-on who successful ones were so prominent last year that the Los Angeles Times picked an All-America walk-on team. But no success story quite matches the case of former University of California at Los Angeles quarterback Rick Neuheisel. Neuheisel quarterbacked his McClintock High School team in Tempe to the Arizona Class AAA title his junior year and into the playoffs his senior year. But when he finished at McClintock, no colleges were interested in him. The three in-state four-year schools didn't seem interested in having him walk on either, so he paid a considerable amount of money in out-of-state tuition and walked on at UCLA.

He earned a scholarship for his work on the demonstration team and eventually was a starter for the Bruins, leading them to a Pacific-10 Conference title and a big win over Illinois in the 1984

Rose Bowl. He didn't have to walk on—go the free agent route, that is—in the pros because the San Antonio Gunslingers of the United States Football League paid him a nice bonus to be their starting quarterback in the 1984 season.

What makes walk-ons do it? Why do reasonably intelligent young men willingly take the pounding without the benefit of a scholarship? There are many reasons, of course, but one answer dominates. They want to buck the odds, prove the recruiters wrong and earn a scholarship or, at least, prove they can compete.

"I think in the back of every walk-on's mind is the question of whether they can pass the muster," said the recruiting coordinator for a Midwest school. "They want to see if they can actually play and they'll never know until they try. Many would be kicking themselves later if they had passed up the chance, thinking 'If only I had tried to play.'"

But it's not a simple matter of a player showing up at the practice field, asking for some equipment and having a coach say "Go get 'em, tiger." That's the stuff of 1940s Grade B movies. The screening process for walk-ons is often as complex as the recruiting process.

"We get about 300 inquiries a year from potential walk-ons and we accept, on the average, about 40," said the mid-western recruiting coordinator. "We ask them to send game films and we require a letter of recommendation from their coach. Most of our players come from within our state. Obviously, it's cheaper for an in-state player to walk on here than to go out of state. But we're also fortunate that we're the only major college football team in our state. Our fans are very rabid and many players have dreamed of coming here to play football since they were kids. We don't have problems getting good walk-ons."

Not all programs are as lucky. An assistant coach at a state school in the West remembered how difficult it was to get good walk-ons during his coaching days at a private southern school.

"We were very fortunate to get 10 a year to come out," he recalled. "It was rather difficult to convince someone to pay $8,000 in tuition and board and get him to come on out and play football for nothing. Where I am now, we get so many good players walking on, I can't believe it sometimes."

But where do they come from? Why do players who often blossom into starters and stars not earn scholarships in the first place? There are various reasons, coaches say.

First, many walk-ons do get scholarship offers but decline them. The offer might be from a school they don't care for or from a school that doesn't offer a tough enough program.

Others are never offered scholarships. They might have played in a large metropolitan area and were somehow missed. Perhaps they lacked the size or speed most major universities wanted. They might have played on a bad team and weren't able to get much attention. The position they played might have been new for them or was a spot that didn't showcase their talents. Or perhaps they were injured and there was a question about their durability.

"No one ever said recruiting was perfect," said a western head coach. "But with the walk-on process, a player gets a second chance to prove everyone was wrong. It never pains me to admit I made a mistake about a player's ability if he comes through for us as a walk-on."

A LOT OF THE TRAINING THAT HELPED HIM BECOME A CHAMPION HAD NOTHING TO DO WITH DIVING.

Russ Rebmann is a Pacific 10 Conference diving champion at the University of Southern California and an Army ROTC cadet.

"I feel the key to becoming a champion diver is having discipline, good concentration, and a lot of self-confidence.

My ROTC training helped me develop in all those areas.

"At ROTC Basic Camp, I got my first real taste of what it's like to be a leader, to be the man in charge. Handling that kind of responsibility has made me feel more confident about myself.

"What made me enroll in Army ROTC? I started thinking about my future. I can't dive the rest of my life. And to be a champ in business, you've got to be a leader and a manager. I'm learning how to do that in ROTC. And I can use my training wherever I go, whatever I do."

THE OUTLAND TROPHY

Presented by the FOOTBALL WRITERS ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA to the outstanding college interior lineman.

Dr. John H. Outland was no ordinary lineman—he made Walter Camp's All-America team as a tackle in 1897. Though he earned the same honor as a halfback in 1898, Outland always considered himself a lineman.

After going on to a successful career as a surgeon, Outland decided to do something about the interior lineman's lack of recognition. So he contacted Des Moines sportswriter Bert McGrane and told him he wanted to establish an annual award honoring the best interior lineman in college football.

The Football Writers Association of America, which McGrane served as secretary-treasurer, would select the winner; Outland would provide the trophy. That was in 1946. Thirty-seven awards later, college football's linemen still labor in obscurity.

"My father's feeling was that the lineman doesn't get the recognition he deserves," said Outland's son, John G. Outland. "The lineman is the unsung hero of the trenches. So it was worked out that the football writers would select each year the athlete whom they mittee. The committee can return a different verdict, but only on rare occasions has it exercised that option.

In another indication of the interior lineman's plight, only since 1978 has the Outland Award been given out at a special banquet. And the original trophy disappeared in 1967, so winners receive a plaque representing the trophy. Before the awards banquet was instituted, winners received their plaques in various ways; Randy White of Maryland got his through the mail, while the first winner, Notre Dame's George Connor, picked up his in Coach Leahy's office.

Some Outland trivia: Oklahoma and Nebraska were tied for the most Outland awards until Cornhusker Dean Steinkuhler broke the tie last year. Now the Sooners hold four, Nebraska five. The Big Eight leads the conference race with nine winners, followed by the Big Ten with eight. Center Dave Rimington of Nebraska was the first two-time Outland winner, taking top honors in 1981 and 1982. The University of Southern California's Ron Yary (1967) is the lone West Coast winner.

Triple Threat Davey O'Brien, TCU.

TRIPLE THREATS

by John Egan, Sioux Falls Argus Leader

College football in days of yore featured an extremely versatile athlete heading its parade of heroes. Before guards were known to be offensive, or backs defensive, there existed in the land between end zones a storied gentleman known as the Triple Threat.

Offenses — and ultimately, the scoring of points — revolved around this multi-faceted individual. He could boost his team to victory with his running, his passing and/or his kicking.

Double Threats are evident today in many a Saturday sensation. The country has plenty of young men who will carry a football past you as well as throw it over you.

But what of the Triple Threat? Where is the halfback who used to quick-kick an enemy from one end of the field to the other? Or, at another time, pin a foe inside his five-yard line with what was aptly described as a coffin-corner punt?

In football, as all things, time marches on. The latest in offensive alignments and strategies seems to prohibit the nurturing of another generation of Triple Threats — and the specialty of punting that they demonstrated so often when the Big Game hung in the balance.

Left to memory, then, are some hallowed names.

The list of Heisman Trophy winners abounds with men who impressed football fans of their day with their extreme competence.

First winner of the Heisman was the University of Chicago's Jay Berwanger in 1935. He ran, he passed and he kicked — both punts and from placement. And the Maroons from the Windy City rolled with him.

In 1938, along came Davey O'Brien of Texas Christian University. At 5-7 and 150 pounds, he was the scourge of the Southwest. Little, yes, but he could handle all three offensive assignments with brilliance. Opponents found it difficult to remember how small he was.
In the Sugar Bowl of 1939, he threw a touchdown pass and kicked a field goal as Carnegie Tech fell 15 to 7.

As the 1930s became the 1940s, Triple Threats Nile Kinnick of Iowa and Tom Harmon of Michigan brought notoriety to the Big Ten. As a senior, Kinnick averaged 40 yards per punt and made 11 of 17 dropkicks plus running and throwing Hawkeye foes into the ground. Harmon played almost every minute during his three-year career with the Wolverines, often with the No. 98 he made famous hanging on him in tatters.

Specialization crept into college football to the tune of the T-formation during the days of World War II, but two Ohio State backs tried to keep the Triple Threat alive.

In 1944, Les Horvath of the Buckeyes kept opponents ill at ease with his kicking, 5.7-yard rushing average and a passing arm that clicked almost 50 percent of the time — and always when an opponent was most vulnerable to it. He helped Ohio State to a perfect season.

Six years later, an athlete with the unforgettable name of Victor Janowicz determined that the 1950s, too, should have at least one look at a punt-throw-run football star. The Buckeyes of OSU had great success in 1950. Janowicz won the Heisman as a junior, then went on to the Pittsburgh Pirates as a catcher.

That was it for the Triple Threat, although Joe Bellino did his best in 1960;
and Terry Baker gave it a shot two years later. Rebirth? No, it was the last hurrah.

Bellino propelled Navy's Cadets to a 9-1 record as college football launched into the 1960s. Rushing was his forté.
But he did complete two touchdown passes, and his quick kicks — lightning bolts from out of the past — averaged 47 yards.

Baker, of Oregon State, was the West

Coast's first Heisman winner. In the process, he pushed the punt-pass-run syndrome into the Pacific Ocean. In 1962, as his team's quarterback, he completed 112 of 203 passes for 1,738 yards. He led the Beavers in net rushing, averaging four and-a-half yards a carry.
He was the Division I total offense-defense champion.

Baker was also Oregon State's punter, but that citation was more or less an honorary one. He earned the job by default, but did manage to average 37.5
yards on 33 kicks. This didn't make him the stuff of which legends are created, but it was enough to make him the last Heisman owner to display three Threats.

Terry Baker was the last Heisman winner to be a Triple Threat.

At the heart of the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign campus lies the Krannert Center for the Performing Arts. A major cultural center for the university and for the Midwest, it is a large complex of theatres, concert halls and support facilities architecturally unified by spacious terraces outside and an elegant lobby inside. The Center, built in 1969, is largely the gift of a late Indianapolis industrialist and U of I alumnus Herman C. Krannert and his wife, Ellnora. It was designed by alumnus Max Abramovitz, an architect of New York City's Lincoln Center.

The New Mexico State University's Sundial is a focal point for the Las Cruces campus. It was designed by Gerald E. Ohsfeldt, who was the landscape architect for the University, and all materials used in its construction were acquired from the nearby Mesilla Valley. The Sundial has been tested and found accurate.

Virginia Military Institute, located in Lexington, Virginia, is a National Historic District. The college is situated on a plateau and the buildings, all of Tudor-Gothic architecture, stand on the perimeter of the plateau facing the parade ground. Dominating the parade ground is the barracks which serves as both living quarters and service area for the Cadet Corps. In 1966 the barracks was designated a National Historic Landmark by the U.S. Department of the Interior.

Trophy since 1971, but no quarterback has gone into his senior season with more real estate than the 7,714 yards Doug Flutie of Boston College brings into the 1984 campaign. That ranks 11th on the all-time NCAA list and Flutie has an excellent chance to become the first major-college player ever to reach 10,000 yards in career total offense and/or passing.

Flutie needs 2,010 yards to break the major-college record of 9,723 by Brigham Young's Jim McMahon in 1981 and 2,875 to become the first 10,000-yard man in Division I-A history. In passing, he needs 2,490 yards to erase the mark of 9,614 set just last year by Duke's Ben Bennett.

Flutie's reviews cause most people to envision him as a scrambler — and, indeed, he can burn you on a broken play — but he also can wing the football with the best of the rifle-armed picture passers.

"Doug is one of those rare players," says BC Coach Jack Bicknell. "He's intelligent and instinctive, the kind you have to let loose. The worst thing you can do with a player like that is over-coach him or make him into a robot. You teach him what to look for all week long, but in a game you let him use his talents and you adapt your offense around him.

"People think because of his size that Doug has to be scrambling around to be effective. That's not right. We've got some plays to take advantage of his quickness, but essentially we're a drop-back passing team. Doug is a thrower first, a scrambler second.

"You wonder how he's able to see over the pass-rushers. He doesn't. You have to look between the rushers, not over them. Quickness is what counts, and Doug has that.

"When we had Mike Kruczek and Gary Marangi, two kids that played pro ball, they would grade extremely high, and then in the big-play column there'd be maybe three, four or five big plays. Flutie doesn't grade as high, but we've had as many as 14 and 15 big plays in a game."

Napoleon McCallum of Navy is the No. 1 returnee in rushing based on 1983 figures—1,587 yards over-all, 144.3 per game and defending champion in all-purpose running (2,385 yards), where he is also the career leader among current players at 4,504 yards. Joe McIntosh of North Carolina State heads the career rushing list with 3,501, Florida State tailback Greg Allen leads all non-kickers in career scoring with 230 points and the 7.7 yards per carry posted by Auburn halfback Bo Jackson was second only to Nebraska's Mike Rozier in 1983.

Jackson is the reason most coaches pick Auburn to repeat as Southeastern Conference champions.

"I think you could probably throw about five schools together, put one player on any one of the five teams and they would have been picked first," says Alabama's Ray Perkins. "You can take Florida, Tennessee, Auburn, LSU and us, put Bo Jackson with any of those schools and they would be picked first.

"That's a compliment to him. I think that's how great a player he is. I think he's the best player in America, college or pro."

Wow! But Perkins has plenty of ammunition going for him. Jackson led the SEC in rushing (1,213 yards, second best in Auburn history), yards per carry (7.7), touchdowns rushing (12) and all-purpose running (131.7 yards per game). And Auburn's first three-sport letterman in 30 years (football, track, baseball) has a history of playing his best in the big games—115 yards against a Georgia defense that was allowing only 106 per game and 256 against an Alabama defense which was yielding just 134.

McCallum's average of 216.8 yards per game in all-purpose running (rushing, receiving, kick returns) was the fifth highest in history. He is so quick that he seldom takes a full, hard shot and when he does he adjusts instinctively upon impact. When finesse doesn't work, the former high school wrestler can go to power. It adds up to a rare combination.

Five of last year's top 10 in total offense are back in 1984. Kurt Page of Vanderbilt was second, Brian McClure of Bowling Green third, Flutie fourth, Raphael Cherry of Hawaii seventh and Randall Cunningham of Nevada-Las Vegas ninth. In passing efficiency, Iowa's Chuck Long was second (he set a major-college record of 10.31 yards per game per pass attempt), Clemson's Mike Eppley third, Baylor's Cody Carlson fourth, Cunningham sixth, Missouri's Marlon Adler seventh, Illinois' Jack Trudeau ninth and Cherry 10th.

On the 1983 rushing chart, based on yardage per game, McCallum was third, Central Michigan's Curtis Adams was fourth, Notre Dame's Allen Pinkett fifth, SMU's Reggie Dupard seventh, Tennessee's Johnnie Jones eighth, Colorado State's Steve Bartalo ninth and Jackson No. 10. Pinkett squashed all talk of the sophomore jinx with 1,394 yards, third highest in Notre Dame history, while Jones became Tennessee's first 1,000-yard single-season rusher—he had 1,116—and Bartalo set a Colorado State of SMU, Keith Byars of Ohio State (second in scoring last year with 120 points), Mike Brown of Air Force, Darryl Clack of Arizona State, Sam DeJarnette of Southern Mississippi, Thomas Dendy of South Carolina, Eric Denson of Wichita State, D. Dozier of Penn State, Keith Edwards of Vanderbilt (a fullback, he was the nation's leading receiver coming out of the backfield with 97 catches), Alonzo Highsmith of Miami (Fla.), Dalton Hilliard and Garry James of LSU, Ethan Horton of North Carolina, Shawn Jones of Oklahoma State, Robert Lavette of Georgia Tech, Ricky Moore of Alabama, Paul Palmer of Temple, Kerry Porter of Washington State, Darryl Richardson of Northern Illinois, Jacque Robinson of Washington, Rick Rogers and Eddie Garrett of Michigan, Jeff Smith of Nebraska and Spencer Tillman and Earl Johnson of Oklahoma.

There are 17 quarterbacks returning with at least 120 points in the NCAA's pass efficiency rating system, compared with 16 a year ago and 13 in 1982. In total offense, 14 returnees averaged at least 200 yards per game vs. 15 in 1983 and nine in 1982.

It takes a stress-tested oil to stay ahead of the little guys.

If you're driving one of today's higher revving, small engine cars, you need a motor oil that can stand the strain.

Here are facts that Pennzoil has worked with to exceed the lubrication requirements of today's small engines.

Situation

FACT: Small car engines are built to tighter tolerances than V-8's. Varnish and sludge build-up become an even greater problem, robbing the engine of power and performance.

FACT: Like racecars, small engines need optimum oil viscosity performance at high operating temperatures. Also, small engines are harder to start or crank when cold, so they need greater fluidity for easy start-up just like racecar engines.

FACT: Small engines work 20% harder over sustained periods. Reduced friction is critical to minimize wear in engines which are running near the edge of their operating capability.

Knowing these vital facts, Pennzoil has been stress-tested to protect small engines that work harder to do the same job as a large engine. And since a smaller engine is under the stress of working at much higher rpm, it needs all of Pennzoil's extra protection. That's why you need Pennzoil protection in your car.

Solution

FACT: Pennzoil is the leader in the development of motor oils with high tech additive properties...such as Z-7... which help prevent varnish and sludge build-up in engines.

FACT: Pennzoil led the way in developing high tech multi-viscosity racing oils. The same technology has been applied to Pennzoil Multi-Vis Motor Oil for your car.

FACT: Pennzoil was first to introduce friction reducers in all their multi-vis oils.

Pennzoil doesn't just keep up with the stress of today's small engine demands...it stays ahead. So you can depend on the latest Pennzoil state-of-the-art technology to give your car the protection it needs.

Pennzoil—quality protection worth asking for.

If you had any doubts that more and more coaches are committed to the ball-control passing game, check the No. 1 returnee in receiving both this year and last. Vanderbilt's Edwards — a fullback, remember — not only led all receivers a year ago but also tops the career chart with 140 receptions. LSU wideout Eric Martin is second in career yardage with 1,957. He has a shot at 3,000 career receiving yards, a rare achievement.

The statistical list of top returning receivers also includes wideout Tracy Henderson of Iowa State (third), wideout Chuck Scott of Vanderbilt (a tight end last year), tight end Mark Dowdell of Bowling Green (tied for fourth) and tight end Mike Leuck of Ball State (eighth).

Of course, none of the "skill position" people could do their thing without the boys in the pits. And there will be a mighty campaign this fall from Pittsburgh, which is touting 285-pound tackle Bill Fralic for the Heisman Trophy, which has never gone to an interior lineman. In fact, you have to go back to 1974 to find a year when more than one player who wasn't either a running back, quarterback, receiver or defensive back cracked the top 10. And the only linemen ever to win the Heisman were two-way ends Larry Kelley of Yale in 1936 and Leon Hart of Notre Dame in 1949.

I've seen Steinkuhler on film (guard Dean Steinkuhler, Nebraska's 1983 Outland Trophy winner), and I was studying him, and I don't think he's as much of a standout as Fralic, and I wasn't even studying him because he was a junior."

In 1981, Fralic became the first Pitt freshman to start in his first varsity game since Tony Dorsett in 1973.

"When he came out of high school, he was probably the best in the nation," says Florida State Coach Bobby Bowden. "I feel sure the pros would have drafted him right out of high school if they could have. He's just a man, an athlete that's big and strong, and he dominates everybody he plays against. I saw him wipe out a couple of our people — pulled out and knocked 'em down like a bowling ball. It ought to be illegal for him to pull."

The list of outstanding tackles includes John Davis of Georgia Tech, Tim Dumas of East Carolina, Damian Johnson of Kansas State, Jim Juriga of Illinois, Mark Krerowicz of Ohio State, Duval Love of UCLA, Mark McDonald of Boston College, Joe Milinichik and A. V. Richards of North Carolina State, Chuck Page of Long Beach State, Joe Ramunno of Wyoming, Stan Short of Penn State, Lance Smith of LSU and Doug Williams of Texas A&M.

Centers: Phil Bromley of Florida,

Matt Darwin of Texas A&M, Keith Johnson of Georgia, Mike Kelley of Notre Dame, Wes Neighbors of Alabama, Chuck Thomas of Oklahoma and Dave Toub of Texas-El Paso.

The returning field of placekickers is statistically the best in history. Arizona State's Luis Zendejas already holds the career records for field goals (65) and points by kicking (295), while West Virginia's Paul Woodside is above the accuracy record. Woodside has converted 83.6 percent of his field goal attempts; the record for a minimum of 50 made is 81.9. Zendejas has more field goals and kicking points in three years than the previous record-holders had in four.

Other accurate kickers include Vanderbilt's Ricky Anderson, Maryland's Jess Atkinson, Georgia's Kevin Butler, Ball State's John Diettrich, Penn State's Nick Gancitano, Arkansas' Greg Horne, Washington's Jeff Jaeger, BYU's Lee Johnson, UCLA's John Lee, Syracuse's Don McAulay, Michigan State's Ralf Mojsiejenko, Long Beach State's Jose Ocegüera, Florida's Bobby Raymond, Tennessee's Fuad Reveiz, Oklahoma State's Larry Roach, Texas A&M's Alan Smith, Army's Craig Stopa, Alabama's Van Tiffin, Texas' Jeff Ward, Illinois' Chris White, Kansas State's Steve Willis, Tulane's Tony Wood... and Arizona's Max Zendejas, who doesn't have to take a back seat to his brother Luis.

Northern Illinois' Darryl Richardson rushed for 1,204 yards as a sophomore in '83.

Even in its football infancy, the University of Georgia would play any opponent, overlooking reputation and distance to further its own cause. Yale. NYU. Southern Cal. It didn't matter.

Yet through 85 years and 866 games there was one outfit that the Bulldogs openly, unabashedly, ducked. At no time could any of Georgia's 22 head coaches honestly exclaim, "We have met the enemy and it is us."

Georgia had never played its alumni. But last spring, the time seemed right. Coach Vince Dooley's crying towel is seldom dry, you see, and a quick glance at his lack-of-depth chart told him he'd have trouble dividing his squad for the annual intrasquad spring scrimmage.

"We're down in numbers this year in some critical positions," Dooley declared. "For instance, we had only two quarterbacks and two tailbacks going into spring practice. We were con-

MAZDA 626 SPORT COUPE. UNUSUAL PERFORMANCE, LUXURY, AND VALUE IN ONE GREAT ROAD CAR.

The word got out fast. Motor Trend magazine named the all-new front-wheel-drive Mazda 626 its 1983 Import Car of the Year. Car and Driver said: "The Mazda 626 does everything well, and that makes it the standard of comparison in its class as far as we're concerned."

The public responded by making it one of the most popular road cars ever introduced in America.

And why not? The innovative 626 gives you a lot to like. An advanced 2-litre overhead cam engine that moves you from zero to 50 in 8 seconds flat. A years-ahead suspension system for exceptional handling. An interior spacious enough for five people. A 6-way adjustable driver's seat. A stunning list of standard features.

Normal:

Sport:

Electronic Variable Shock Absorbers are controlled by buttons on the dash linked to a solenoid valve atop each shock. NORMAL setting provides a softer ride. In AUTOMATIC mode, the front shocks stiffen above 50 mph for greater stability at cruising speed. SPORT, as the name implies, gives you firmer damping in all four shocks.

In truth, the 626 is one road car that permits you to experience something highly unusual.

Namely, the performance and luxury you look for—at a price you hardly dared hope for.

cerned about getting through spring practice, let alone the G-Day Game."

There are some obvious risks in challenging yesterday's heroes. For one thing, you will always be outnumbered. For another, you just never know who might show up. At Minnesota, they like to recall a spring alumni game in the early '50s when Bronco Nagurski returned to campus to show the lads how the game should be played.

Nagurski was about 50 years old, recently retired from his pro wrestling career. "I remember they put him in on first down at the varsity five and he carried some of the kids into the end zone for a touchdown," said Don Riley, the veteran columnist in St. Paul.

Dooley decided to take his chances at Georgia and put out a call for all former lettermen. No less than 110 of them, encompassing the classes of 1937 through 1983, suited up to show the varsity you can't fool "old dogs" with new tricks.

"I thought we would win the game late in the fourth quarter because of our youth and the fact that it was a very warm spring day," said Dooley. "But I think the alumni wore themselves out. They were so excited, they couldn't keep themselves in the locker room. Fifty minutes before the game, they were out there exercising and throwing the ball around."

Former Stanford quarterback John Elway, now with the Denver Broncos, took part in some pre-alumni game autograph signing.

George Mira, Sr., former quarterback and All-America at the University of Miami (Fla.), put on a show for his son, George, a red-shirt freshman linebacker at UM during this year's Alumni Game.

With five minutes to play in the third quarter, the score was tied, 10-10. Then the day's activities began taking a toll on the alums; and the varsity, taking a considerably more serious attitude, rolled to a 38-10 victory before a crowd of 20,785.

The game was a first for Georgia but only the latest chapter in a tradition born 60 springs before. On campuses all across the land last April and May uniforms were being stretched to new extremes and father lined up against son for dear old Alma Mater. If you looked behind the freshly sprouted tree leaves, you could see. . . .

Varsity players at Illinois were restricted by 12-minute quarters, no blitzing linebackers and the wind in their faces all day as they played the alumni. "I handicapped it perfectly," said Coach Mike White, whose varsity needed a 17-yard touchdown pass on fourth down by Jack Trudeau to break a tie in the fourth quarter for a 24-14 win. "The alumni gave us enthusiasm and interest and good competition."

At Purdue, the alums had to be supplemented by varsity walk-ons to be competitive and still lost, 36-3. "We bill it as the Challenge Bowl," said Dale Samuels, a former coach who organized the team of old-timers. "For our varsity, this is the start of the 1984 season."

At Colorado, Coach Bill McCartney didn't want a repeat of last year's 42-0 blowout by the varsity so he limited the Buffaloes' offense to only four basic running plays. "A year ago we had to let the clock run in the second half," he said. "We were determined to make this more of a game. We did. We almost lost (14-6)."

Stanford billed its game "The Legends of Football—Stanford Style" and the 124 old-timers outnumbered a Cardinal varsity depleted by injury. Still, the varsity's style prevailed, 20-0.

Down in sunny Florida, the University of Miami defended its national championship for the first time by playing its alumni for the second straight year. The varsity won, 28-14, fending off the passes of George Mira, the legendary quarterback of the 1960s who desperately wanted to throw a touchdown pass over a freshman linebacker named George Mira, Jr. When it was over, then head coach Howard Schnellenberger said, "I don't think our kids get a great deal out of it. But what we sacrifice technically we're trying to make up in redeveloping tradition here."

Kent Lawrence, MVP of the 1966 Cotton Bowl and 1967 Liberty Bowl, scampered 63 yards to the one-yard line in the 1984 Georgia Alumni-Varsity Spring Game.

Georgia's number one quarterback Todd Williams, left, visits with his father, Dale — a former Bulldog QB himself in the early 1960s — prior to the 1984 Varsity-Alumni Game.

Tradition. That may have been Knute Rockne's motivation when he began inviting Notre Dame's alumni back for a spring scrimmage in the 1920s. Competition took a back seat to fun and fellowship. The varsity seldom ever won but that mattered little because the Irish grads were revered as national heroes. And the results didn't count.

That wasn't the case in the early days of college football. Colleges would schedule their alumni to fill out a schedule already dotted with high school and athletic club teams. Results of these early games have been included in the all-time won-lost record of many schools.

Often, the alums gave the varsity its toughest game of the season.

In 1895, Tulane's third year of football, the Green Wave ended a 4-2 season with a 12-0 victory over the alumni. Five years later, the alums were the only team Tulane could beat in a 1-4-2 season.

In 1897, Wisconsin went 9-1, losing only to its alumni 6-0 in the next-to-the-last game of the season. Illinois' 1898 team played its alumni twice. California did it three times in 1902, winning all three games on shutouts to finish 8-0. In 1904, Purdue beat Notre Dame but lost to its alumni 6-2.

As late as the 1920s, alumni teams were still being scheduled as regular-season opponents by some schools. Southern Cal results list a 20-0 win over the alums to open the 1922 season and California went 9-0-1 in 1923 with the help of a 3-0 victory over its graduates.

But then Rockne started the spring tradition and college football followed. Notre Dame discontinued its series in 1968 when pro teams decided to protect their investments and banned participation in such games.

"A lot of people pulled for the old-timers," said Notre Dame's Roger Valdiserri. "The alumni wanted to show the varsity they had a lot of work to do before fall."

But not everyone takes these matchups lightly. As Dale Samuels of Purdue said, "the alumni better never win." ●

The bright star that guided them for four years has moved on, but the light produced by the 1984 Iowa State volleyball team may prove even more radiant.

The Cyclones have ridden on the success of two-time All-Big Eight middle-blocker Diane Doles for the past four years. Doles has graduated but ISU coach Mary Fischl, with four returning starters and the best recruiting class in her three years at Iowa State, remains confident the Cyclones can hold their own.

"We will have no star," said Fischl. "Each player will have to be accountable and no player can carry the team on her own. In the past, we have been dominated by an outstanding middle-blocker. Now we have talent in all six positions. I think our team can be even more successful with six solid players than with one star.

"We have a lot of unknowns but I feel good about the season because we return four starters and those players are the nucleus of our team."

Leading the way will be junior co-captains Amy Montgomery and Alicia Reynolds. Montgomery, from Estherville, moved from outside hitter to setter last year and, while she struggled early with the new position, came on to lead the Cyclone offense. Montgomery also was the second-leading blocker for the Cyclones and has become a good all-around player, Fischl says.

Reynolds, who saw only limited action as a freshman, earned a starting role last year and capped the season with an exceptional Big Eight Tournament. The left-hander from Greenwood, Mo., was named to the all-tournament team for her superb play in the Cyclones' matches against Kansas State and Nebraska. Reynolds made 11 kills and hit .455 against Nebraska in the semi-finals and had her season high of 12 kills against Kansas State.

Juniors Debbie Zimmerman and Amy Bonderer are the other returning Cyclone veterans. Zimmerman was plagued by a knee injury last season but she had surgery and is returning to full strength. She came to Iowa State with extensive Junior Olympic training and started immediately. Zimmerman was third in kills last season and led the team in service aces as a freshman. Bonderer moved into the starting six late in the season after making the transition from junior college volleyball. The six-footer from Hillboro, Mo., will be counted on to fill the middle blocker void left by Doles.

The Cyclones also return one of the most valuable "seventh" players around in senior Lori Cockerham. The Waterloo native has been an invaluable player off the bench for ISU the past three years, providing strong back-row defense and strong serving at key times. Kathy Keating, a sophomore from Evansville, Ind., shared most valuable substitute honors with Cockerham last season. Keating has been working hard as a setter and will give the Cyclones something they have not had at that position before—options.

For the first time, Fischl will have the luxury of running either a 5-1 offense or a 6-2, which means two players can set the play and the Cyclones can keep opposing defenses more off-guard.

Fischl has a third ace up her sleeve with freshman Missy Roberts from Davenport. Roberts has strong Junior Olympic experience and could contribute as a setter immediately. Roberts, Sue Nosal of Glen Ellyn, Ill., and Linda Evans of Iowa Falls are three strong freshmen recruits that Fischl expects to push for playing time.

Fischl also has Iowa freshman Colleen Burke and Merry Happe on the team, and with returning sophomores Cheryl Cybulski, Katy Lavery and Chris Sevrens, the Cyclones will be solid down through the ranks.

Iowa State travels to Austin to meet the University of Texas, who finished ninth in the nation last year. They also meet Southwest Texas, North Texas, and California-Irvine. The Cyclones challenge Big Ten foes Iowa, Minnesota, and Wisconsin in addition to playing a home-and-away match with each Big Eight team.

The Big Eight will again be strong, led by eight-time defending champion Nebraska. The post-season tournament will be at Oklahoma this season.

Of course, Fischl expects the Cyclones to be one of the challengers. ISU finished second in the post-season tournament in 1982 for their best showing ever and then tied for third last year.

"In time, we have the ability to beat a lot of teams. We have some obstacles to overcome and some questions to answer, but I believe by season's end, we will be in the conference race."

Cyclone Scouting Report

Historically: Iowa State has not played the Bulldogs since 1982 when the Cyclones recorded a 35-10 victory. ISU leads in the all-time series 46-16-4, and has not lost to Drake since 1957 when the Bulldogs recorded a 20-0 shutout. 1984 Review: Drake is 0-2 following a 33-28 loss to Northern Iowa last Saturday, and a 17-12 loss to Southwest Missouri State two weeks ago. The Bulldogs recorded a 1-10-0 mark in 1983 and placed sixth in the Missouri Valley Conference. Drake has lost 12 of its last 13 football games, including its last four consecutive contests.

Offensively: Drake returns seven starters offensively, including quarterback Ray Gronowski. Gronowski led a fourth quarter comeback last Saturday against Northern Iowa, in which Drake rang up 21 unanswered points. Receiver Ray Abernathy is a big-play threat. He caught four passes for 147 yards and two touchdowns, including an 86-yard strike in the first quarter. Tailbacks Carlos Foster and Tim Ray provided most of the Drake ground attack.

Defensively: The Bulldog defensive corps held Northern Iowa's running game to only 49 yards on 50 rushing attempts. They proved to be quite vulnerable in the defensive backfield, however, yielding 23 pass completions and 293 yards. Sophomore linebacker Wade Harman had 15 total tackles against the Panthers, while strong safety Myles Easter racked up 10. Nose guard Joe Adrian is a returning starter, as are outside linebackers Larry Gilleland and Paul Carberry, and cornerback Shawn Johnson. Easter and defensive tackle Jim Market also started last season.

Kicking: Placekicker John Brda has kicked two of three extra points and is unsuccessful on two field goal attempts this season. Punter Curtis Highland is averaging 37.9 yards per punt.

The Coach: Ninth-year head coach Chuck Shelton has compiled a 32-47-0 mark at Drake University. Shelton was named Missouri Valley Conference Coach-of-the-Year in both 1980 and 1981 when his squads compiled successive 8-3 and 10-1 marks.

1984-85 Cyclone Basketball Outlook

There may be some new faces on the work force, yet Johnny Orr's 1984-85 Cyclone squad will likely be his most talented at Iowa State. And that could give the Cyclones a chance to match last season's success when they won 16 games, finished in the upper division of the Big Eight Conference, and earned a berth in the National Invitation Tournament (NIT).

The Cyclones lost two starters in forward Ron Harris and off-guard Terrence Allen. However, it appears that Orr's recruiting efforts could bring more offensive spark than his Cyclone teams ever had. And he could build some potentially gripping defenses.

"This group certainly has to rate as one of my best recruiting classes ever, including those when I was at Michigan," Orr said. "We went out and recruited the kind of people to fit our style of play," he said, in reference to the addition of three Michigan all-stars in Jeff Grayer, Gary Thompkins and Eli Parker. "I don't like to watch slow down basketball, so I sure as heck don't want to coach it," he cracked.

Orr has another newcomer some people may have forgotten. Lafester Rhodes, the talented Memphis native, signed with the Cyclones two years ago and spent last season as a redshirt.

"Thompkins and Grayer, and possibly Rhodes, will push to start," Orr says. "And with three starters and some key reserves returning, that's something I can get excited about."

The three returning starters — forward Barry Stevens, guard Jeff Hornacek, and center David Moss — are among nine returning lettermen.

Stevens is one of the Midwest's premier players. His 22-point scoring average was second in the Big Eight to Oklahoma's All-American and Olympian Wayman Tisdale. Stevens earned first team all-Big Eight and honorable mention All-America honors.

Hornacek, a junior guard, dished out a school record 198 assists and contributed 10 points per game. He may, however, be seen in a new role this year. If Thompkins can adapt to the collegiate game as quickly as Orr feels he can, he could take over the point guard duties in a move which could send Hornacek to off-guard.

David Moss, a 6-9, 220-pound junior, scored 7.3 points and led the team in rebounding with 5.9 per game last year.

Lack of depth was one of ISU's weaknesses last season. Only junior swing guard Ron Virgil logged a considerable amount of playing time.

Those who could be in more prominent roles this season are sophomore centers Sam Hill (6'9") and Brad Dudek (7'1"). And that would help offset Iowa State's past problem of matching up with taller opponents.

Iowa State Center

Last night's appearance by Comedian/Songwriter Steve Allen in Stephens Auditorium marked the opening of a 30-day celebration commemorating the 15th anniversary of the opening of the Iowa State Center.

It was in early September of 1969 that Stephens Auditorium began bringing stellar entertainment of all types to Ames and central Iowa, and during the next 30 days the center will showcase that kind of variety once again.

Here's the lineup:

Herbie Hancock, Monday, Sept. 17, 8 p.m., Stephens Auditorium—The jazz keyboard artist and his Rockit band will present an evening of high-powered music, featuring D. St. Bernard Fowler, and Foday Musa Suso. Tickets at $13.50 will be available at the door.

Elton John, Saturday, Sept. 22, 8 p.m., Hilton Coliseum — The popular artist will include Ames as a stop on his 44-city "Breaking Hearts" tour. Tickets are priced at $15. Order by phone with Visa or MasterCard at 515/294-2436, or pick them up at the door.

Blackstone, Saturday, Sept. 29, 8 p.m., Stephens Auditorium—Billed as "America's foremost magician," Harry Blackstone Jr. will present an evening of mystifying entertainment. Public tickets are priced at $14, $12, and $10, but discounts are available for senior citizens, groups, and students.

Kenny Rogers, Tuesday, Oct. 2, 8 p.m., Hilton Coliseum—Eddie Rabbitt and Helen Reddy will open the Kenny Rogers concert. Ticket prices are $16 and $13.50.

They are available at the Center Ticket Office in Stephens Auditorium, by phone with Visa or MasterCard, or at the door.

Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center, Friday, Oct. 5, 8 p.m., Stephens Auditorium—Six virtuosos from the ensemble will present a program in the auditorium's new "chamber setting," in which reserved seats are available at three prices, but only on the main floor. Public ticket prices are $12.50, $11, and $9.50. Discounts are available.

BLACKSTONE

Duck's Breath Mystery Theatre, Friday and Saturday, Oct. 5 and 6, 7 and 9:30 p.m. both nights—The zany comedy team returns to Ames for four performances. Tickets are priced at $6, with a $1 discount for students.

The Cleveland Orchestra, Friday and Saturday, Oct. 12 and 13, 8 p.m.—Ames Festival opens its 15th annual season with two concerts by The Cleveland Orchestra. Tickets are priced at $19.50, $16.50, and $13.50. Discounts are available.

The month-long celebration will climax Sunday, Oct. 14, with a concert by Barry Manilow in Hilton Coliseum. Tickets will go on sale Monday at the Hilton Coliseum box office only, starting at 9 a.m. Check Sunday's newspaper for ticket prices.

THANKS, CYCLONES...

...for giving us some of the most exciting moments in major college football.

As the official food and beverage supplier for Cyclone Stadium, we're proud to be a part of this great program.

ISU FIGHT SONG

Oh we will Fight, Fight, Fight for Iowa State,
And may her colors ever fly.
Oh we will fight with might for Iowa State,
With the will to do or die! Rah! Rah! Rah!
Loyal sons forever true,
And we will fight the battle through!
And when we hit that line
We'll hit it hard, every yard, for I.S.U.

Songs of Iowa State

RISE SONS OF IOWA STATE

Verse:

Fighting sons we sing to you,
keep your spirit ringing true;
Make your valor carry on,
and you'll see the battle through,

Chorus:

Rise sons of Iowa State
and proudly raise your flaming banner to the sky;
Lift our ringing challenge valiantly,
let our fighting war-cry ever be "Victory!"
Bold sons of Iowa State keep marching onward ever near the vic'try gate;

There to consecrate
our everlasting loyalty.
Rise! Iowa State.

Today's Chevrolet

Let's get it together...
buckle up.

It turns heads as well as it turns corners. Celebrity Eurosport.

At first glance, you'll notice the 1984 Celebrity Eurosport looks like a very special four-door sedan.

As you can see, its sleek shape is designed to reward your eyes, while it cheats the wind.

What you can't see, however, are the things that make Celebrity Eurosport as enjoyable to drive as it is to look at.

Inside, there's more passenger room than 101 out of 106 import cars.

Special F41 Sport Suspension components produce a ride that's firm, yet extremely comfortable.

And under the hood, Eurosport's available High Output V6* produces ample power to shorten the distance between here...and there.

All of which adds up to an automobile Car and Driver magazine calls "an absolute joy to whip through the hills on a ripply stretch of two-lane blacktop." (3/84)

Celebrity Eurosport. From Chevrolet. Test drive one today. And find out how good a four-door sedan can be.

*Some Chevrolets are equipped with engines produced by other GM divisions, subsidiaries, or affiliated companies worldwide. See your dealer for details.
