In the course of a year at college, everyone goes through a defined set of rituals. It can be called red tape or tradition, but we all go through these actions day after day, year after year.

In college, each year is a new experience. Although many of the same rituals continue year after year, the way we go about performing them changes each year we are here.

Freshman year, everything is done the hard way. Campus maps guide us to our destination, but the longest possible routes between two points is inevitable. Choosing which classes to take is another freshman dilemma. Exactly what is involved in class selection? Just ask an advisor what he recommends or discuss the problem with another student. Don't worry about your major until next year, just take the basics.

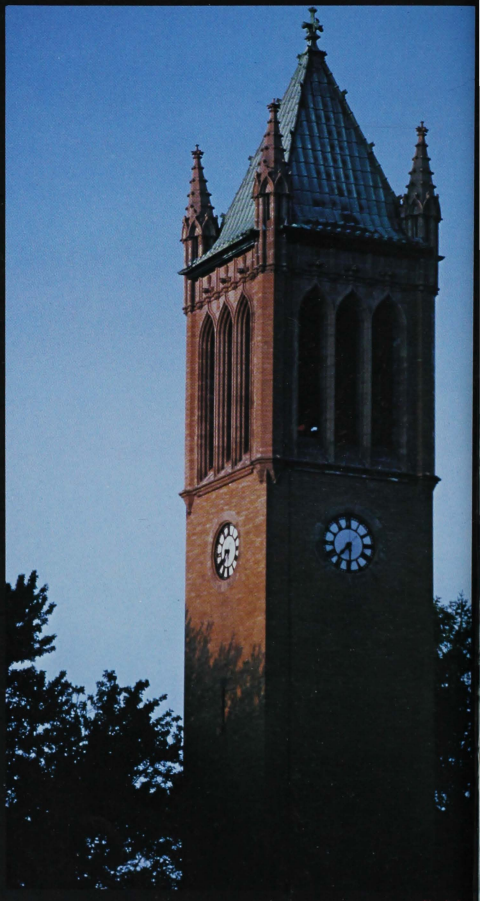

Sophomore year is more enlightening now that you know the system. Getting the right classes at the right time is easier, so put those campus maps away and sleep until 8:55 for your 9 o'clock class. Sophomores, with short-lived memories, spend the first week laughing at the "lost" freshmen.

Junior year starts getting scary. For once, you finally see graduation as a possibility, so close yet so far. It's time to get serious and choose a major. Now's the time when you realize that you took the wrong classes and didn't get the grades that you should have.

Moving off-campus is another new experience for many juniors. It's great to finally feel like you're on your own. After about a month though, cooking on your own gets to be pretty boring and ordering pizza just doesn't cut it. Not to mention the fact that you actually have to clean the bathroom.

Senior year is a daze. You've spent so long looking forward to it, that when it finally arrives, you just can't believe it's true. Job-hunting is scary, but Graduation Day still seems far off. Unfortunately, for most of us, it turns up much more quickly than we anticipate. All of a sudden it's May and the year is already over. Graduation Day is exciting, but at the same time an unexpected let-down. It's a strange feeling to end the four years of hard work and dedication that you've put into your college career.

Looking back, it's hard to believe the changes that have occurred since your first year. Even through the past year, there have been many changes.

Today, campus is much different than a few years ago. Through the course of the year, new construction has rerouted students' way to class. The Mechanical Engineering Building, the new addition to the W. Robert Parks Library, and the Hub are just a few of the new additions that have enhanced our campus.

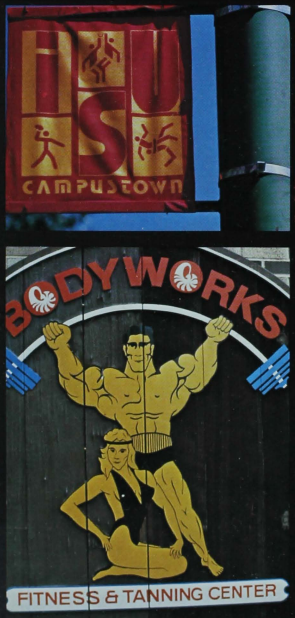

Though these changes are progressive, there are a few drawbacks. The biggest inconvenience is the further deterioration of available parking space. Not only is this a problem for students, but the faculty and staff as well.

Progressive changes have been a trend through the course of the year. Not only has the campus changed, but the City of Ames as well.

The most notable changes can be seen in Campustown. Within the past year, numerous businesses have come and gone. Replacing Campustown Saloon, Bobby Rogers, Co-op Records and the Library Lounge have been Burger King, the Art Store, Record Works and Welch Avenue Station, along with many other specialty shops.

CAMPUSTOWN
BODYWORKS
FITNESS & TANNING CENTER

Not only has the Campustown business district expanded, but the residential area as well. New apartments have been mushrooming to help ease Iowa State's serious housing shortage. But many students discovered that the conveniences of living close to campus did not come cheaply. Paying monthly rent of $500-$600 was not uncommon in the Campustown area.

College was no bargain to be sure. Unexpected costs were always the most expensive ones. If you could only have all the money spent on long-distance phone calls made to get more money from Mom and Dad. Although you often wondered if you would have enough money to make it through the year, somehow you did. And somehow you could afford to make it back for another year.

Learning how to budget money is probably one of the first lessons learned at school, but it doesn't stop there. From the first day of classes we are faced with coursework, demanding professors and dealing with other students. Not only do we learn from the courses we take, but being at college is like a course in itself. Throughout the year we gain experiences that will help us over future barriers and memories that will last a lifetime.

Fall enrollment broke the previous year's record for the ninth time in ten years during 1984. One hundred and six students brought the largest student body to 26,321.

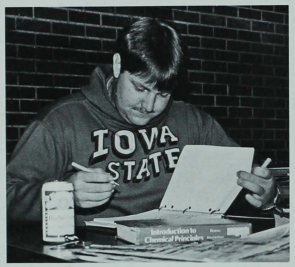

Not only did the University experience increased enrollment, but many of the colleges within the University had a greater number of students. The Colleges of Education, Engineering, and Home Economics all had more students than 1983.

A few of the colleges experienced decreases, however. Sciences and Humanities had an extreme decrease in the number of students enrolled, as the new Business College stole a number of its undergraduates. It all happened in the course of a year . . .

—Jim Lee

Contrary to what parents and professor think, students don't study all the time After several hours of studying, the page become blurred and the only remedy is study break.

Students find a variety of activities to occupy the breaks. For many students, it offers a chance to catch few extra minutes of much needed sleep or a chance t relax and do nothing. Calling friends to catch up on a the latest gossip or just chatting with a roommate o neighbor is a good way to forget about classes.

Watching T.V. is also a very popular activity. In th afternoons dens fill with All My Children and Genera Hospital fans trying to keep up with all their favorit characters.

All of these activities are popular, but breaks cen tered around food are the most popular. Do-Biz Cookie and Baskin Robbins ice cream runs are popular among the Big sis/Little sis crowd. The pizza joints are kep busy delivering til all hours and scent of popcorn fill many rooms and halls.

One thing students look for in a break is a place t "get away and relax" as one student put it. The Union i a popular place to go. It offers comfortable chairs, T.V. room, a Commons and a video and game room Another way to get away it is to get outside. On nic days, Central Campus is often scattered with student sitting around talking, reading and taking naps.

Wherever students go or whatever they do, thei ideas for a study break vary. But overall, their reason are the same — to get away for a while and relax. —Beth Harvey

Students get away from studying in various ways. For some, Left: Thumbs-up is the place to do it. Others, Below: prefer to take a quick nap. Bottom: Some prefer the indoors and some would rather be outside. Bottom Right: But most every student at some time or other has made the famous "Quick Trip Run."
*—Mike Free

Students can be seen studying in just about anyway and anywhere on campus. Students study alone, with a friend, during the day, at night, at the library or in their dorm room. Just about anything goes. Students create their own style for studying.

Dorm rooms are a popular place and an old standby for students because they can create the atmosphere they need to study. Whether it's loud rock and roll or peace and quiet, a dorm room can be molded into the perfect study room.

"I study in my room at my desk because that's where it's quiet," said Donna Thorson, a freshman in speech communication.

Thorson said she hates to study in the house den because of the noise and distractions.

The library is also a popular place to study, with every nook and cranny filled with students.

"I like to study in the library because of the comfortable chairs," said Jennifer Miller, a freshman in journalism. Miller also likes to study in the lounge in Oak Hall or in her room.

The Memorial Union is also a popular area for study, especially in the Commons and Browsing Library. The benches on the ground floor are places to see students hard at work.

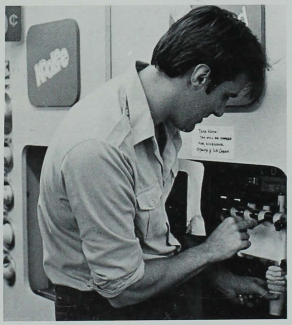

When the weather is warm, students migrate to the great outdoors, covering Central Campus and trying to get a start on a tan while studying.

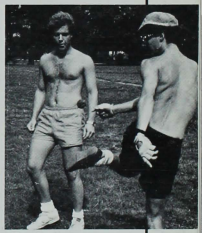

The main problems students have in studying are procrastination and allowing themselves to be distracted by the television or stereo, Thorson says. "My girlfriend studied during the commercials," Thorson said. "What a waste of time."

Styles for studying haven't changed along with the times, neither has the reason for studying — it's got to be done.

And Study Breaks

The Hub takes on a new look

After about three months of renovation, the Hub re-opened and once again became students' favorite spot on campus to get a Coke.

The Hub received a complete restoration during the spring of 1984 through a pledge from the class of 1982. A total of $143,000 was pledged for the Hub's facelift.

The new building hardly resembles the old Hub, neither inside, nor out. A mellow mauve color has replaced the traditional cardinal and gold inside. New counters enable students to stand and eat, old vending machines have been replaced, and wood and glass have modernized the interior.

Tickets for campus productions are also sold in the Hub. The ticket office has moved and changed to a sleek modern space, hardly reminiscent of the old ticket booth.

An outside eating area is the greatest change in the landscape. A large brick patio with tables is always packed during nice weather.

It's a great change from the Hub's original appearance when it was built in 1892. It was first used as a depot for a steam train that connected the university with downtown Ames. The Dinkey Motor Line was the only way that most students could get downtown, since most didn't have cars.

When the train was discontinued in 1908, the building was moved to its present location behind Morrill Hall. It served as the campus bookstore and later as a post office. In 1958, the Hub was converted into an eating establishment, and its vending machines have been dispensing Cokes ever since.

Answers to the Questions of Religion on Campus

No more Sunday services. That may be some students' reaction to the beginning of their college years. But as life on campus unfolded so did many shocking realities.

Along with the realizations that college students actually go to their classes, get homesick and like to complain about food service, the biggest surprise could be the realization that college students get up on Sunday morning and attend the church service of their choice. There are many student religious groups to help with that choice.

The traditional ISU Bible Study offers a large group experience. Members are free to sing, listen to a speaker and discuss the Bible and how it effects their lives. Charles Meyer summed up the groups easy going attitude, "If you want to come, you can come."

The Navigators, another traditional religious group, are interdenominational and conduct Bible studies whenever students are eager for a meeting. Linda Moore, said the main theme for the Navigators is "to know Christ and to make him known."

Following along the footsteps of the ISU Bible Study, the Chinese Christian Fellowship meets once a week to study the Bible. They take a book from the Bible and study it thoroughly for an entire semester and apply it to everyday life. Yu-Hun Hous, a follower in the fellowship, said more than 50 percent of the non-Christian foreign students who attend the meeting become Christians.

The Way International is a home fellowship ministry. The group meets in the home of one of the members about three times a week. The service includes a teaching from the Bible, singing and praying. Hideo Tachibana, member of The Way International, said, "We want to make it available for people to read the Bible and understand it." The Way International student organization is an interdenominational organization that seeks to make Jesus Christ and the Scriptures known in every community throughout the world.

The Mennonites form a student organization that holds get togethers for other Mennonite students.

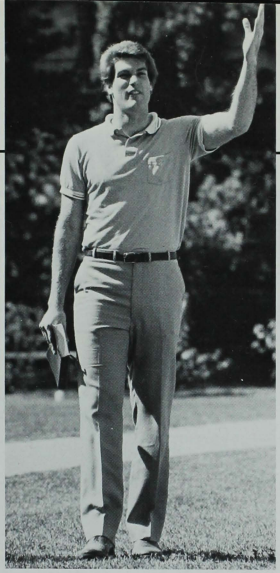

Stressing peace is the Mennonitees' main goal, and they stay away from evangelizing on the campus grounds. Mennonitees practice a believers' baptism. This means that when an individual is spiritually and emotionally ready, he or she will choose to be baptized. During the year, the Mennonites show films to the ISU community explaining the history of the Mennonites in the hope that people will better understand them.

In 1853 when the Bahai faith was strongly emerging, its beliefs were quite contradictory to those of the day. Members believe that men and women are created equal and should be treated as such, that science and religion should agree and not refute each other and that individuals should investigate what they consider to be true and act accordingly. They also believe in world peace and that a universal language should exist. People would have their own dialect in addition to a common language that would ease communication and promote world-wide understanding. The founder of the Bahai faith was Baha'u'llah, who is considered a messenger from God to man.

The Bahai calendar has 19 days in a month and 19 months in a year. The first day of each month is the Bahai feast where spiritual, consultative and social fellowships are carried out. No paid clergy conduct services for the Bahai's: it is up to the individual to decide on the amount of spiritual progress. Bryce Abel summed up his views on the Bahai faith, "The purpose of God creating man is to know God and to love him."

One of the most controversial subjects on campus in 1984 is Zevs Cosmos and his Nudist Christian Church. Being from Europe where many parks are designated for Nudists only, Cosmos feels that nudity comes second nature to him, and Christianity. "Nudity fits Christianity because we were born nude. God made us in his image, which mean God is nude too," he said. "No verses in the Bible tell us how to worship God, either clothed or nude." Cosmos said God never told Adam and Eve to wear clothes. They were kicked out of the Garden of Eden and wore clothes for protection against the environment, not because they were ashamed of their bodies.

The biggest obstacle Cosmos has to face in forming a registered, organized group on campus is trying to explain the Nudist Christian Church. Cosmos said the purpose of the group would be to discuss and study nudity in Iowa, the United States and around the world as it applies to family, athletic and public situations from ancient times to the present. He said understanding the issue of natural and wholesome nudity would enrich society.

After forming a group, Cosmos would like to see them meet twice a week. On Monday evenings people would meet clothed, for those who have modest tendencies. Wednesday evening would be for people to pray, sing, dance and even play games in the nude. Cosmos said no one should be shocked over this rather contemporary idea. "The people in Europe are so well used to the sight of the naked people that they're walking about without paying attention and don't even cast a look."

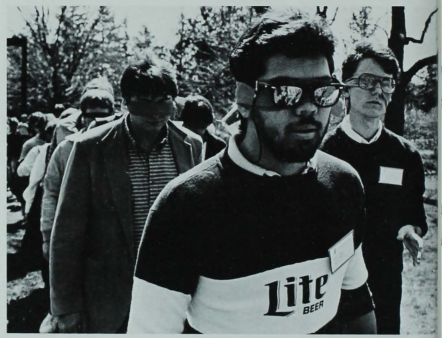

Cosmos stressed the fact that his nudist church is not a place for people with perverted minds. It is not a pornographic shop. "If people are going to want to have sex, they can leave the place," he said.

Cosmos doesn't like the way students have reacted to him. He said that the Constitution allows all of us to be free. If people told us how to worship, America would become a dictatorship, and the last thing this country needs is dictators, he said.

On the brighter side, Cosmos said the Nudist Christian Church is off to a good start and maybe someday ISU will have a class offered in the nude. Perhaps that is far in the future, but Cosmos offered advice to those who condemn and criticize something out of ignorance; "People who don't like it, all they have to do is walk away."

New "Perceptions" was the goal for '84

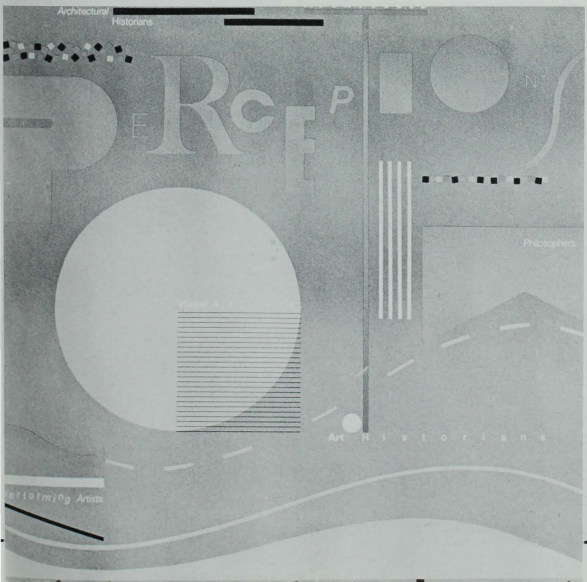

"Perceptions" was the theme for LABash '84. LABash is the annual landscape architecture student conference. It was held in Ames for the first time on April 6-8. 550 people were in attendance. LABash originated in Guelph, Ontario 12 years ago and has moved to different schools each year. LABash '85 will be held once again in Guelph.

The idea for hosting the conference here came up two years ago when eight students were visiting Pennsylvania State University. They applied to host LABash '84 and spent a year and a half finalizing the plans. The cabinet was led by advisor Gina Crandell and student coordinators David Yakish and Tina Sack. The cabinet had five committees working with them.

The theme "Perceptions" stated much of what the students wanted to accomplish. They wanted LABash to be intradisciplinary. To achieve this they brought in people from varied backgrounds to speak in panels and have provacative discussions with the students. The panels were organized around questions such as: "Landscape As Art: Beyond Function?", "Spatial Communications: Do landscapes reflect people?" and "Site Specific Structure: So sites generate stories?" The mixture of artists, practitioners, historians, and academics helped create varied discussions.

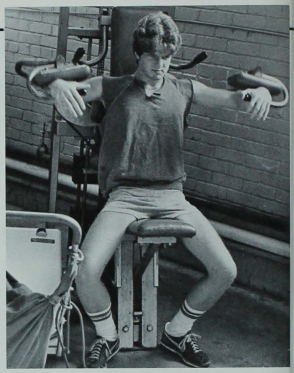

The actual day of the conference was a very nice day. It proved to be the only good day of weather in a spring filled with rain. An 800 foot-long rope walk led the students from the Scheman Continuing Education Building to Central Campus. The rope walk created a form of art as participants wove their way to the project "Post Modern Mutton" by Sack. It was designed to show an application of the conference theme "Perceptions". According to advisor Gina Crandell, "Everything ran smoothly."

ISU offers different ways to Shape-Up

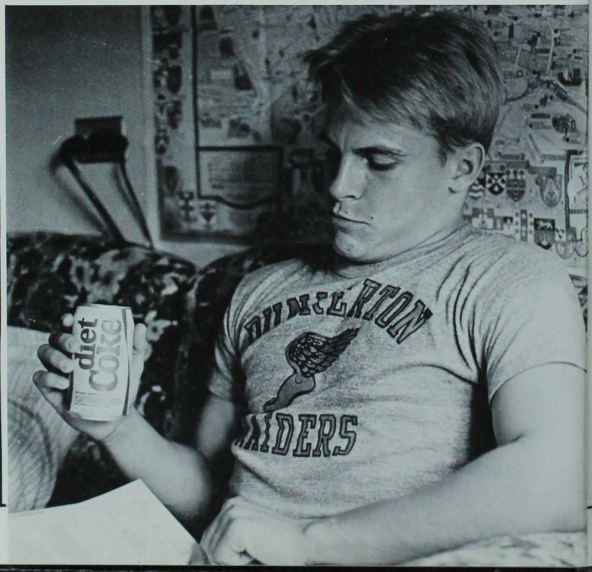

An Exercise Clinic sponsored by the physical education department was an opportunity for people of all ages to benefit from exercise and meet others.

Assistant Director Lyle Kesl said, "Most people needed someone to work-out with and the clinic became sort of a social thing."

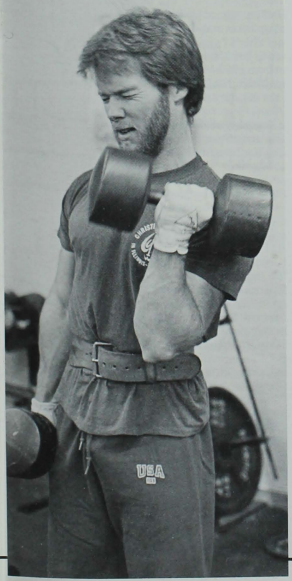

According to Kesl the program's goal was to familiarize people with an exercise program and encourage them to continue it. "Many adults had an initial fear of exercise after being away from it for years. We tried to educate people about their target heart rate and start them on a slowly progressive program," said Kesl.

The clinic's hour-long work out consisted of warm-ups, calisthenics, jogging, strength exercises and a cool-down routine. Each participant's heart-rate, blood pressure, body fat and cardiovascular fitness were tested before and after the seven-week clinic.

The wonder pills that wasted away fat while a person slept and those reducing girdles passed away with the years. People have wised up to the fact that exercise is the only safe and permanent way to trim those extra pounds.

The physical education department also offered several programs to analyze body fat and help reduce it. One program is a water/body fat test which required the person to be submerged underwater and then, through displacement, the person's body density was determined mathematically.

"Once you know how much fat you had, then you knew exactly what to lose," said Dr. Wallace Hutchison, professor of physical education.

The department also offered tests of cardiovascular fitness such as an oxygen consumption measurement and a treadmill test. Cholesterol levels in the blood were also tested.

Aerobics exercises classes were another exercise alternative offered.

Campus Buildings Renamed

There is something new about three of the buildings on the ISU campus. They haven't been remodeled, they have been renamed.

The ISU Press Building is now Carl Hamilton Hall, the Synchrotron Building is now Spangler Geotechnical Laboratory and the former ISU Credit Union Building was renamed the Engineering Service Building.

The new Carl Hamilton Hall was named for ISU's former vice president of information and development who retired last summer after 17 years in that position. Hamilton also served as head of the department of technical journalism from 1962-1965 and as director of university relations from 1965-1967. He is still serving ISU, now in the capacity of a volunteer in the Development Office.

Hamilton Hall houses the Department of Journalism and Mass Communication and offices for ISU's student publications, including the Iowa State Daily and the Iowa State Bomb.

The Geotechnical Laboratory was named in honor of Merlin G. Spangler, professor of civil engineering, international authority on soil engineering and recognized as the foremost living expert on underground pipe. Spangler has been a member of the Iowa State faculty since 1924, and has served on a part-time basis since 1965.

The laboratory serves as the geotechnical research laboratory for the department of civil enginnering and the Engineering Research Institute.

When the credit union moved from its former position on Haber Road, the Engineering Extension Service moved into the building. The building is now the headquarters for the EES. The move freed space in Marston Hall and the Engineering Annex for other colleges of engineering uses.

ISU's Fifth Largest College Added

Once known as the department of industrial administration, it finally received its proper rank and name — the College of Business Administration.

On July 1, 1984, the School of Business Administration became ISU's fifth largest college, with 1857 students. The colleges of Science and Humanities, Engineering, Agriculture and Design are larger. There also are 1950 pre-business students in the S & H College who must apply to the business college after they complete a required curriculum.

To accommodate the new college, the third floor of Carver Hall was renovated. The remodeling made room for faculty, advising and deans offices. Charles Handy, dean of the college, estimated the Carver facilities would be adequate for five years. The college will need more space within 10 years, he said.

The status of the college opens up more opportunities, Handy said. It is now eligible for accreditation by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business. The college can also offer more graduate programs, and prospective students and faculty are more easily recruited by a college than a school. Current students can claim the prestige of graduating from a college, which can be helpful in certain situations, Handy said.

Though now separate from the S & H College, Handy said the Business College won't forget its liberal arts roots. "Although we offer majors in various business areas, we still take a broad-based liberal arts approach to education. We will continue to graduate students with an area of specialization but with a firm appreciation for the broader spectrum of life," Handy said.

Handy's job as dean is different than when he was director of the business school. "I'm more concerned beyond the immediate day-to-day things," he said. An associate dean now handles such activities.

Handy said he deals with the external matters of the college, such as relationships with other colleges, image building and contacting alumni.

The chain of command also changed with the promotion to college. "We can tell our story directly to the central administration," Handy said. Previously, the dean of the S & H college relayed requests to the univeristy's administration. Business department no longer compete with other S & H departments for funding for capital improvements and faculty, he said.

The college's creation benefited business students through the establishment of a priority system. Business students will have an easier time getting into business courses, Handy said, the priority system would have happened eventually "but becoming a college helped get it."

Before becoming a college, the department of industrial administration was part of the department of economics and sociology. The only degree available was a bachelor's of science and the term industrial administration confused students, parents and business recruiters.

In 1980, the School of Business Administration was formed. Finally, the business program was identified as such, and a bachelor's of business administration was offered. In 1984 the board of regents created the college.

From obscure department to fifth largest college, the College of Business Administration has come into its own.

Denise Fleissner, a senior in speech communication, (Telecommunicative Arts), likes being busy, and she certainly is!

Fleissner works at WOI-TV, Ames, carries 20 credits worth of classes, and is very involved in the university cable channel, R-31.

Fleissner became involved in the telecommunicative arts (TCA) when she was a freshman. She began working at ISU's cable station R-31. R-31 is run and operated by students and all programs are written, directed and produced by students. Fleissner took advantage of this opportunity and was eventually involved in several small productions.

In Fleissners' third year, she received recognition for her work with the cable station. "First Date," an episode of a bi-weekly comedy/variety show entitled "Conversations," won first place in the 21st Annual National Student Productions Award Competition sponsored by Alpha Epsilon Rho. Scott Ginger, a fall 1963 graduate in speech communications produced the five minute episode in which Fleissner was an actress. The award presentation was held in Los Angeles.

As of spring 1984, Fleissner has been the producer of "Conversations." She also became program director for R-31. This position involves selection and organization of programming, being responsible for the actions of several management people and making sure that broadcast quality programming is on the air once a week. In addition, she also co-hosts "Cinema Scoop," a show about current happenings in the film world, produced by Jeanine Penticoff.

While the cable station has given Fleissner the chance to be creative, her Summer '84 internship and her current job at WOI-TV give her the actual on-the-job experience she needs. During the summer, she directed the WOI morning newscast. After the internship was completed, she was hired as a production assistant.

Fleissner has set her sights on moving out of Iowa after graduation. She hopes to be successful in finding employment in the television industry.

Architects give it their Best Shot

On most days, Lake LaVerne is simply an unassuming puddle lying in between the Union and Friley Hall. During the right season, a few scattered ducks or swans can be seen gathered around its shores or in its sparkling waters, but in September '84 a rather unusual event took place there. It was the Annual Architecture Cardboard Boat Contest.

For the contest, 47 third and fourth-year architecture students tried to build aesthetically pleasing and watertight vessels out of 36 square feet of cardboard and liquid sealer.

The students had 10 days to plan and build the boats before they were judged at the College of Design Building atrium. Here the boats were weighed and judged for creativity. Weights ranged from 5 pounds to almost 13 and were rated on a scale of 1 to 10.

The boats reflected as much creativity and variety as the students who designed them. Entries ranged from simple, unadorned brown boats, to elaborate, titled and multi-faceted colored boats.

Nor Hasima, a junior in architecture, one of the eight women competing, built a deep red boat in the shape of an arrow. She said that she thought her boat would prove lake worthy, but would probably not win the competition as it was not decorated enough.

After the judging, the students picked up their creations and headed for the lake. The boats had to complete a journey around a row boat approximately 100 yards out in the water.

Scattered in the crowd that had gathered to watch, were some former participants. Steven Protzman, a senior in architecture, expressed the desire to "do it again," because it was an "absolute blast last year."

Hasima's boat took in a little water but she completed the trip safely. Other students were not so fortunate. Sean Ervin, a junior in architecture, wass one of the unfortunates. His boat started taking in water the minute he got in it. Ervin said that the boat had tipped and that there was nothing that he could do.

The crowd cheered as the "L.S. T8" made it around the rowboat and back to shore. The boat belonged to Todd Wehr, another junior, and all that could be seen of him as he reached shore was his camouflaged cap and a bottle of champagne.

Award Winning ISU Advising Program

Iowa State University was the first recipient of the Outstanding Institutional Advising Program Award given by the American College Testing/National Academic Advising Association (ACT/NACADA) in the "multi-university category."

Phyllis Brackelsberg, former chairperson of ISU's Academic Advising Committee and assistant professor of textiles and clothing, said NACADA gave awards in eight different categories, including: multi-university, public institutions of enrollment over 25,000 students; public university, public institutions of less than 25,000 students, private university, private college, church-related college, public college, government controlled institution, and two-year junior/community college.

Brackelsberg and Ruth Swenson, S&H associate dean, put together a 2500-word manuscript in the spring of 1984. It summarized ISU's advising program, including its delivery information systems, recognition/reward systems, training program strategies and evaluation techniques. After being submitted for review, the manuscript was evaluated for its innovative quality, creativity, currency, impact and transferability (programs applicable to other institutions).

Brackelsberg said, "We stressed the total picture of the advising program."

She also said that many other schools have trained "directors" of the advisors. At ISU, the faculty serve the other faculty; they all work together and oversee each other.

Brackelsberg said that for a long time ISU didn't have training, committees or programs for the advising system. Now, however, ISU tries to expand its system.

"We have recently started sending advising newsletters to all of the advisors five times a year," Brackelsberg said.

Another improvement to ISU's advising system involves giving outstanding, dedicated advisor awards each year as a sign of appreciation. This year's winners were:

Agriculture — Detroy Green and William Wunder
Business Administration — Judy Sullivan
Design — Roger Baer and Pat Hansen
Education — Lucinda Frederickson
Engineering — Myrna Whigjam
Home Economics — Jan Dorslund
Science and Humanities — James Hutter and Bernard White

Design Instructor takes time to improve

In the opinion of Kathy Gibbs, her students are a group of sincere, hardworking people, characteristics which make them respectable.

Gibbs teaches drawing and painting and also supervises art education students at Iowa State. Gibbs has taught at ISU since 1978. She said that students' abilities have changed over the years. "The area that I've seen improve the most in students is in the inability to create. Now there is a lot more individualization rather than just drawing in an 'academic manner," said Gibbs.

Gibbs said changes also have been taking place in the College of Design since 1978. She said more visiting artists have been to ISU. Further, a better scholarship program has come into existence along with more grants being made available to students.

The number of cultural trips that students can take to New York and Chicago has been increasing in recent years, according to Gibbs. She said that in the past there has been a lack of stimulation for art students. The students were limited in what they knew due to a lack of exposure to good museums. She said the increasing number of trips has been extremely beneficial to students.

Gibbs took a faculty improvement leave in the fall of 1984 and worked on a series of paintings and drawings in which she focused on different types of horizons. She studied forms both in Montana and Iowa in order to do her projects.

In the fall of 1984, Gibbs was nominated for the Outstanding Teacher Award by Nancy Polster, an associate professor in art and design. According to Polster, Gibbs is an outstanding professor anyway because she encourages students to get involved in exhibitions and because of general comments Polster has heard from her advisees about Gibbs.

New Trends In Computer Technology

Microcomputer labs have been established at ISU to keep pace with the growing industrial, business and educational uses of microcomputers (micros).

To equip the labs, a University committee decided last spring that two companies, Zenith Data Systems Corporation and Texas Instruments, Inc., best fit the criteria they had established concerning features and price.

The ISU Computation Center has purchased 75 Z-100 computers from Zenith and 60 to 75 TI Professional computers from Texas Instruments for the microlabs on campus, according to Ruth Schlotfeldt, Microcomputer Specialist at the Microcomputer Product Center in the Computer Science Building.

Each computer costs about $2,100 and includes floppy disk drives, a monochrome monitor, increased memory and high resolution graphics.

There are three Z-100 microcomputer labs on campus, two in Carver and one in the Library, and two TI labs, one in Town Engineering and one in Marston.

The micros will be used for different classes around the campus, including business, accounting, mathematics, engineering and computer science. Students who are not normally exposed to computers before they graduate are able to obtain experience on them.

The microcomputer labs are receiving good reviews from most students, "for some students its just another lab (they have) to do, a lot of other students are taking to them really well," said Schlotfeldt. "So much so that some students who don't have to use the machines are using them."

A few programs are available for people who are taking classes using micros, including a popular electronic spreadsheet program called Lotus 1-2-3 which is used on the Z-100 along with a popular word-processor called Wordstar. The TI-Professional labs are using Easywriter II, Easyspeller II, Multiplan, pfs:File, pfs:Write and Pfs:Report.

Both labs also have available to them Microsoft (MS) Basics, MS-Fortran, MS-Cobol and MS-Pascal.

Zenith and Hewlett-Packard both have contracts with ISU allowing faculty, staff and students to purchase micros from them at a discount. The contract with Texas Instruments, however, does not allow students to purchase computers.

Zenith is selling the Z-100, 150 and the 160 while Hewlett-Packard is selling the 150 Touch-Screen and the HP Portable.

The Computation Center is an authorized service center now for both the Zeniths and the TI's so it is able to do most services and repairs on the machine without having to send them away to be repaired, said Schlotfeldt.

The Computation Center also supports the machines after purchase in regards to its software.

The center directly supports only Zenith, Texas Instruments and Hewlett-Packard. Other companies have been excluded because, "by limiting it a little bit the staff here can be a lot more knowledgable when those people (who bought it here) need help," said Schlotfeldt.

Schlofeldt is not aware of any plans in the near future to expand the number of microlabs or to set up labs with Hewlett-Packard micros. —Ed Cicenas

Music Generation

The music industry has seen its share of trends. Bach and Beethoven brought the classics, the Beatles and Elvis taught us how to rock and Saturday Night Fever brought us disco, (thank goodness some things do come to an end).

During the 80's, a relative newcomer has made it big on the music charts — electronic music. With its synthesized sounds duplicating nearly every instrument in music, it appears as if the automation of the music industry is soon to follow.

Gary White, a professor of music and a member of the Iowa State music faculty since 1967, doesn't believe automation will happen.

"It's not as if electronics are going to replace the music of the past," said White. "Electronics are used to expand rather than duplicate."

White is the head of composition and director of electronic music at Iowa State. His courses range from music analysis and seminars in analysis for performances and music theory to a class in electronic music synthesis.

His fascination with electronic music dates back to the early 1970's when the field was still in its infancy. Back then, electronic music was so crude that the end product suffered. Even so, White realized the electronic importance to music in the future.

In order to make electronic music a reality at Iowa State, White had to develop and locate a studio to house the equipment. In 1973 he worked with ISU engineers and computer specialists to develop an electronic music studio. Over the years, that equipment has been housed in eleven buildings on campus, including the computer science building and the exhibit hall. In 1982, the electronic music department found its permanent home in the newly constructed Music Building.

Today, electronic music is in almost every aspect of the music industry, White said.

"There's very little music that people hear that is not electronic," said White. "It's integrated into musical life and it will find its way into music at all levels."

It may be the wave of the future, but it's not a cheap wave to ride. One synthesizer alone with its own built in computer ranges between $30,000-$40,000. And, with each passing year, new breakthroughs in electronics cause rapid revamping of equipment to insure top quality sounds.

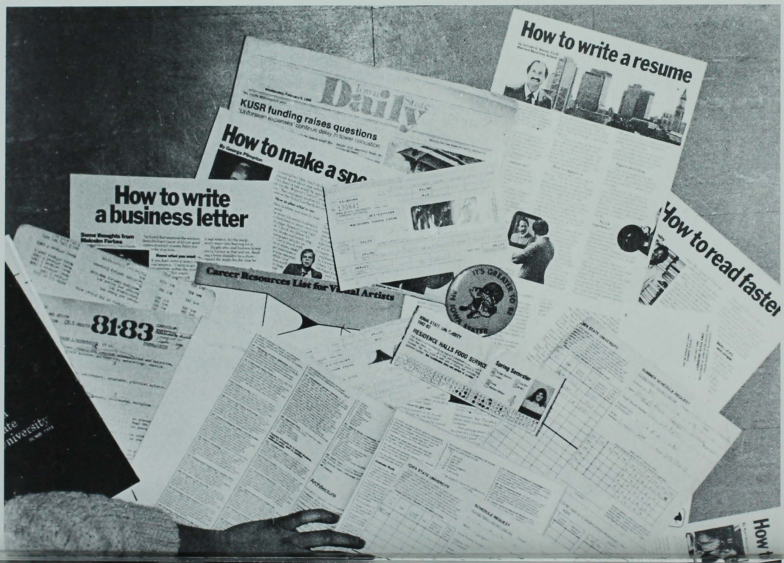

With the dawning of a new era in the music industry, it seems only appropriate that an institute famous for science and technology be home to a man with such creative energies. —Lynn Tietjin

The early years

Ah yes, collegiate life: higher education, truth, justice and the American way. We on the Bomb staff would like to salute those of you still in the formative years, and congratulate those of you who are beyond them.

Setting aside the social hassles and readjustment problems, those early years are full of trials and tribulations of many kinds. There are dormitories, food service, English 104 — University red tape, your first preclassification, and who could forget Library 160?

There is also the hair-tearing and ulcer-causing decisions about choosing a major and fulfilling degree requirements.

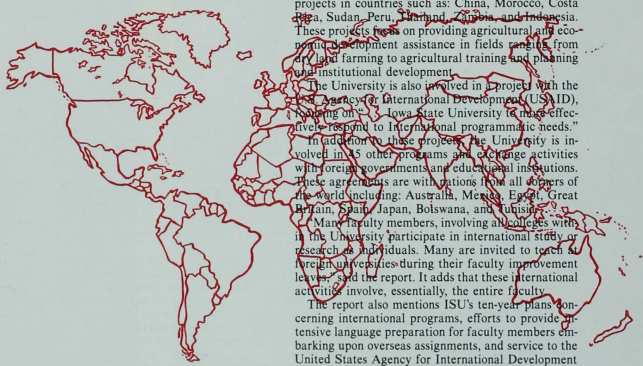

Of all of these spine tingling experiences, one stands out as the ultimate in sado-masochism: pre-classification. Remember trying to schedule your classes around eight o'clocks and early afternoons on Fridays? Not to mention trying to get a light load on Thursdays to ease the resulting headache from Wednesday Night Bar Night in Campus Town.

Remember trying to pull all the classes in the right order, from the right column and under the right section (I'm sure I can't be the only one who scheduled fall classes for spring semester).

The only reward for going through with this University-style torture, was that every time you did it, the "Probable Term of Graduation" came a little closer.

Yes, the early years of collegiate life; we wouldn't trade them for anything. Or would we? — Susan I. MacAdams

Iowa State University in Ames and Abroad

Iowa State University has been directly and extensively involved with study abroad programs, and with international contracts and agreements for many decades," stated a report submitted to the Board of Regents Dec. 10.

At present, the University is involved in 12 major projects in countries such as: China, Morocco, Costa Rica, Sudan, Peru, Thailand, Guyana, and Indonesia. These projects focus on providing agricultural and economic development assistance in fields ranging from dryland farming to agricultural training and planning and institutional development.

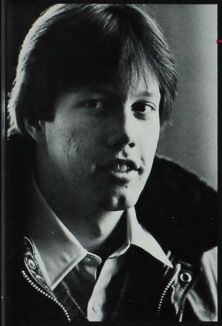

The University is also involved in 2 projects with the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), working on "... Iowa State University to more effectively respond to International programmatic needs."

In addition to these projects, the University is involved in 45 other programs and exchange activities with foreign governments and educational institutions. These agreements are with nations from all corners of the world including: Australia, Mexico, Egypt, Great Britain, Spain, Japan, Botswana, and Tubisia.

"Many faculty members, involving all colleges within the University participate in international study or research as individuals. Many are invited to teach at foreign universities during their faculty improvement leaves," said the report. It adds that these international activities involve, essentially, the entire faculty.

The report also mentions ISU's ten-year plans concerning international programs, efforts to provide intensive language preparation for faculty members embarking upon overseas assignments, and service to the United States Agency for International Development and other federal agencies.

"Iowa State University is fortunate to be directly involved with foreign universities and international agencies. International contacts by faculty members result in improved instruction on campus, direct access to research conducted in foreign laboratories, and people to people relationships having significance for economic development in Iowa," concluded the report.

It's not all in a name

While daydreaming through role call in class on Monday morning, a name catches your attention. "Hey, did he say Bill Murray?" you ask your classmate. Of course you know that this Bill isn't the famous comedian, but the name sure did wake you up.

Iowa State's own Bill Murray isn't the famous movie and television actor, but he is a freshman majoring in mechanical engineering from Morris Plains, New Jersey. Murray says he does get funny looks in class during role call.

"People sometimes expect me to be funny and crack jokes all of the time, but that doesn't always happen," said Murray.

Entertainers dominate the list of famous named people at Iowa State. Paul Newman, a junior in architecture, said his mom didn't realize that her son had the same name as the movie star.

"She hadn't really thought about it when she named me," Newman said. Although he doesn't have blond hair and blue eyes, the auburn-haired and brown-eyed Newman says his name makes it easy to meet people.

"People always remember my name," he said.

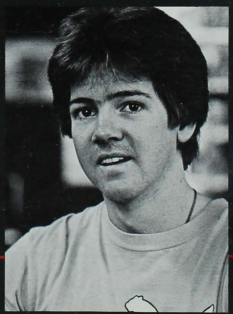

When people think of Linda Evans, they envision Krystal Carrington from the television show Dynasty. A leisure studies major, Linda is on the Iowa State Volleyball Team and is happy with her name. Often when people hear her name they look at her strangely. This summer her friends even gave her a nickname; would you believe it was Krystal?

"Hey, are you related to the Kennedy's?" is a question frequently asked of John Kennedy. Even though his first name is John he goes by Scott, his middle name, to avoid confusion. His parents knew their son had the same name as the famous president but Scott stresses he was named after his uncle.

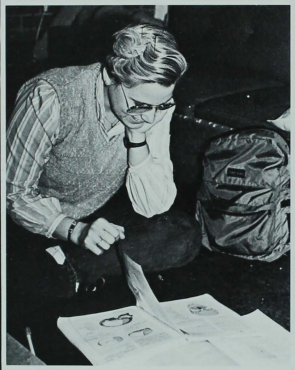

There are many people at Iowa State with names the same as those of famous people. Even though they can be instantly stereotyped, each has their own special talents making them unique individuals. — Jill Barret

Juggling: something only sideshow performers and students can do.

Juggling is something all students find themselves doing; balancing classes, social life, work, etc. However, add a five to six day practice schedule for three to four hours a day and you have all the makings of a true juggler . . . a college athlete.

Many, however, people don't think of college athletes as the organized persons they must be to balance all these different things. The stereotypical view of the brainless jock totally immersed in their sport comes to most people's minds first. This statement for most athletes is untrue. Many of ISU's finest athletes must be serious students since their careers in sports will end when they're handed their diploma.

"There are so many good players out there your chances of making it in the pros is slim. Getting a diploma is definitely important to me," said basketball player Sammy Hill.

"When we bring an athlete to ISU our main objective is to stress that they are student-athletes. They are a student first and an athlete second," said Asst. Athletic Director, Tom Litchenburg.

academics concerns

Hill complemented Litchenburg's statement.

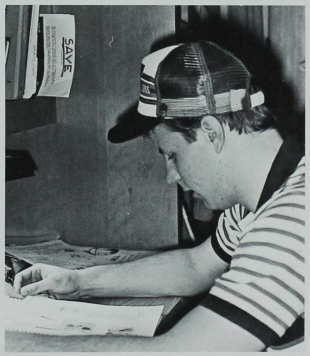

"The athletic department and Coach Orr really stress the importance of our class work and remind us what comes first."

Litchenburg explained a new NCAA role which has just been put into effect this year concerning "satisfactory progress." The rule is structured to keep athletes from staying in school too long without a major or taking credits under various departments to receive a degree. The program now requires college athletes to declare a degree program by their fifth semester to keep from going onto a six-year plan.

Keeping up on classes is not only made more difficult by the heavy practice load, but often players miss class when they must travel to away games.

ISU cross country runner Paula Bracklesburg said, "It's hard to keep up. Sometimes it's just run, work, study, period."

"The experience the student-athlete gets while involved in a sport is another part of their education. They learn to work with others and to keep trying until they become better and succeed. This is something you can't measure with A's and B's," said Litchenburg. — Steve Forster

Farewell to the President

Above: Parks at the Annual Tree Lighting Ceremony in December of '85. He plans on doing some gardening now that he will be retiring. — Ed Ciceras

The season's enhance Iowa State; or does Iowa State enhance the season's? Guests to the University frequently commented on the blend of the landscaping and the buildings to give the campus character. ISU President W. Robert Parks took pride in the aesthetic value of the campus.

He said, "One thing a president can do is create a congenial atmosphere for the faculty and students to learn and work in."

When Parks assumed the position of President in 1965, he had already served ISU as a Political Science/Agriculture Economy professor, Dean of Instruction and Vice-President of Academic Affairs. Parks credits much of his success as president to the professionals he has working with him.

"Much of a presidents success is due to the body of people he has working with him. I feel I have a very good group of people working with me, not only in the administration but in the faculty and staff as well. I really enjoy them."

At the time when Parks took office, Iowa State was primarily a science and technology college. Parks felt in order to make the University more proficient that a narrow base would have to be expanded to include the liberal arts.

"In my first address to faculty I asserted the need to broaden our base by developing more emphasis on the liberal arts," said Parks.

Parks feels that students today are fundamentally the same as when he was in school although some of the rules have changed. He believes that students are more work oriented than they were in the sixties. Parks has seen an increase in women's enrollment at the University and a liberation into the professions predominantly held by males.

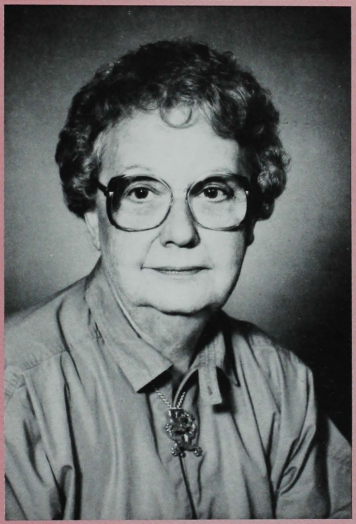

"I feel students today have much more offered to them in terms of classes and curricula. They have more decisions to make and increased responsibilities," he said.

The acquisition of new buildings to the campus has been a highlight for Parks. He particularly enjoyed the advent of the Iowa State Center. Parks commented that supportive alumni are largely to thank for the Center. Parks feels the Center allows Ames to represent a cross-section of what is happening in the nation.

Parks favorite building though is the W. Robert Parks/Ellen Sorge-Parks library dedication in his name this fall. "I couldn't think of a building I'd rather be named after. I was pleased that Ellen was named with me. She has always been an intellectual companion.

Focusing on retirement, Parks feels an important step for an administrator who is retiring into the community is to stay out of the way of the sucessor but be available to help if needed. Parks plans on doing just that and "as much gardening and lawn work as the neighbors can stand. — Julie Phye and his first Lady

Being the wife of a university president isn't what most people would consider a normal life-style. But Ellen Sorge-Parks takes her duties in stride and doesn't let her status influence the way she lives.

Before his appointment to president, Dr. Parks taught political science at ISU. The Parks' made many friends during that time. "When we came to the Knoll we decided to do things just as we had done them before and we've continued to keep the same friends," said Parks.

Parks keeps busy entertaining guests and attending meetings but said she has no formal outline of her responsibilities. "I just do what I feel I ought to do," she said.

After getting a Bachelor's degree in journalism at the University of Wisconsin, Parks went on to earn a Ph.D. in political science. She has since kept an academic interest in the discipline.

A frequent patron of the W. Robert Parks/Ellen Sorge-Parks Library she commented on the recent dedication. "It was the greatest honor I could have had. I've always enjoyed the library. It has a deep meaning for me." In the little time she has had for a hobby, Parks collects 18th and 19th century letters and diaries.

After President Parks' retirement the couple will move to a house in Ames. They are retiring in Ames because they enjoy the changing of the season's in Iowa. The Parks' feel they have their roots in Ames and will be able to maintain their contacts here. — Julie Phye

Student Security is on Guard

Iowa State University's Student Security Program has greatly improved since it began four years ago, said RCA Student Security Supervisor Tom Guessford.

Guessford, a junior in political science, said the system began in TRA and was set up by Sergeant Fred Behr to aid Campus Security. At the time, he said, campus security had so many calls to unlock doors and perform other smaller tasks in the dorms that the parking lots couldn't be patrolled properly.

When Guessford became a student security guard three years ago, the program was just beginning and he said the guards weren't getting much respect. "Security pig" was just one of the terms officers were called by some students. Now, however, Guessford said he feels students better understand who they are and they are looked up to.

"We're not police officers. We're really concerned with stopping behavior. Now, we may take some flak in some situations, but usually they (the offenders) do what they should."

Student security officers do encounter many different situations during their shifts and because of this, Guessford said, the guards need to have good verbal skills.

"You're out there dealing with people and you need to be able to express yourself," he said.

Guessford also said they must be assertive, good at making quick decisions and self-motivating.

After advertising on posted fliers, interested students who have seen the posters or heard about the job from friends are interviewed. Through a two step process, similar to R.A. interviewing, Guessford feels they get some very good people.

The new guards, unless they were hired at a time other then when they regularly interview in the spring, must attend a week-long conference in the fall before classes start. This conference provides important information and situations practice so the guard has everything he needs to know to do his job.

Along with everything the guard learns during the conference, he must be self-motivating to do his job properly. During the regular eight-hour shifts, guards are only allowed a one half-hour break. The rest of the time they spend walking their area.

Guessford said that despite rumors that security guards do their laundry or other similar activities on their shifts, he doesn't feel they have a problem.

Guessford, when working, felt he was motivated to do the job correctly. The phrase — "What happens if I don't and something happens?" — kept him going.

Other Security guards were motivated a little differently. For example, Denise Wood, a junior in accounting, says she enjoyed the job because it gave her a different view of the campus.

"It's interesting to walk around when no one else is around. You also meet a lot of different people — students, partiers, and those in between."

The only thing Wood said she sometimes finds hard about the job is staying awake in class the next day.

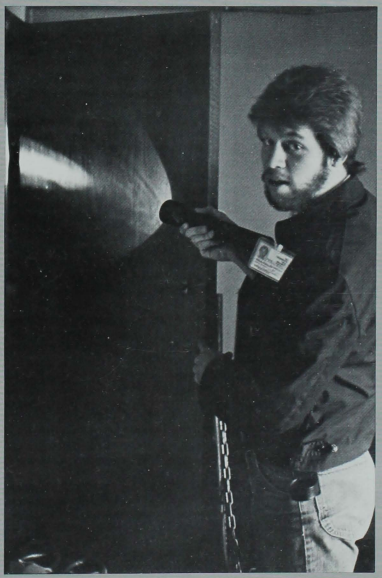

Tom Kellen, a junior in ag. engineering, said he likes being his own boss.

"You have to do your rounds but you still have freedom and you're outdoors. It's also interesting to help Campus Security, HA's and RA's out when things happen, like ambulance calls," he said.

Student Security Guards provide an important service to Iowa State. Although they may have a rough start, ISU's Student Security now has many students who look up to them. — Monica McGregor

After Hours

Times' nightlife and study time always competed for students' attention. The University Campus provided a wide spectrum of cultural events. Entertainment ranged from plays to musicals to concerts and outings to local bars.

Some of the popular establishments included Granddaddy's, the Cave Inn, State's Fieldhouse and That Place.

Students danced to Van Halen, Huey Lewis, Prince and Duran Duran. Ames was even lucky enough to attract a few of these entertainers.

Besides the attraction of a fun night out, campus events made it difficult to hit the books. Homecoming, Varieties and VEISHEA were a few of the activities students took part in.

It's hard to figure out just how everything got done when it was supposed to, but somehow it did, in the course of a year . . .

MDA Dance

Muscular Dystrophy . . . to many people these words mean a smiling child in a sad wheelchair. Behind the smile, however is a person living with a hereditary disease that cripples because of a progressive wasting of the muscles.

At the present time there is no cure for MD, although physical therapy, splints for the limbs and spinal supports are often helpful to those who are afflicted. Since MD is hereditary, identification of carriers and genetic counseling provide a preventative measure for combating Muscular Dystrophy.

In the hope of someday finding a cure, over 1,700 dancers moved to the music "All Night Long" at the 12th annual Muscular Dystrophy Association ISU Dance Marathon held April 6-7. The dancers raised $82,244 for the cause.

The 30-hour marathon was packed-full of a variety of activities for the dancers. There was a pyrami build, a scavenger hunt and an airband contest, among other things.

The dancers observed many different types of dancing throughout the night. There was a demonstration by Orchesis in addition to the demonstrations of belly dancing, square dancing and break dancing.

A main attraction was the presence of Casey Kasem, the host of the American Top 40 weekly radio show, and his wife. He was the national chairman for Super Dance '84 and was there representing Jerry Lewis.

Kasem commended the dancers for their efforts and then he and his wife joined the dancers on the floor of Hilton Coliseum and signed autographs.

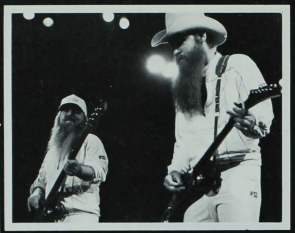

ISU has had the number one dance marathon in the country for six out of the past seven years with much of the credit going to the twenty students who donated their time and effort year-round as members of the MDA Central Committee and subcommittees. ✦

ZZ TOP

Appearing on stage in identical white jumpsuits and hats and red guitars, ZZ Top performed to a screaming crowd in Hilton Coliseum February 10, 1984.

In an attempt to "tear this place down," lead guitarist Billy Gibbons and bassist Dusty Hill began the concert with "She Got Me Under Pressure." The crowd responded enthusiastically at the roar of a car engine.

The band never slowed down during their 90-minute set. Gibbons and Hill included several more cuts from their latest album, Eliminator, during the course of the concert as well as performing many old stand-bys. Drummer Frank Beard contributed greatly to the sound by keeping the rhythms strong and crisp but was left out of the stage antics.

Undoubtedly, "Sharp Dressed Man" and "Give Me All Your Lovin' " were the two favorites, judging by the audience reaction.

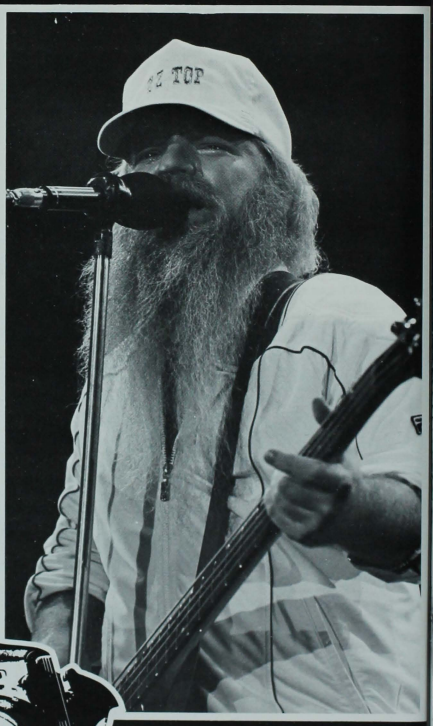

The crowd was treated to the members' individual antics and the group's guitar-waving strut, complete with perfect choreography of dancing in tandem, chest-length beards, hats and "cheap sunglasses."

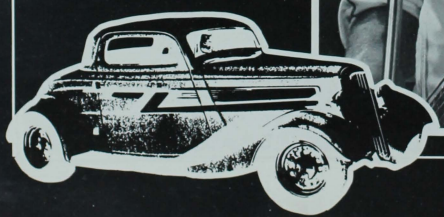

For the second encore, they performed "Tube Snake Boogie," again displaying their unique strut as the fans sang the chorus.

The light show enhanced the already electric performance. Lasers were used effectively in "Cheap Sunglasses" and "Tush," with dry ice providing a smokey effect. The show ended when a dummy, dressed as a roadie fell from the ceiling, and the band left the stage for the final time.

The Eric Martin Band fired up the crowd with a 40-minute opening set. The five-member band performed such songs as "Fools Never Fall In Love" and "Sucker For a Pretty Face."

Dan Fogelberg, one of this year's VEISHEA weekend highlights, performed at the Hilton on May 6, 1984.

Fogelberg, upon entering the coliseum, plunged into his two hit songs, "Times Like These" and "Language of Love."

After an enthusiastic response from the crowd, Fogelberg welcomed everyone with "Happy Halloween." Anyone missing his Halloween concert at Hilton last year probably thought he was crazy. But the fans who attended the October concert didn't forget him — several came in costume and one fan even showed up in a complete tuxedo.

Throughout the concert, Fogelberg delighted everyone with a variety of songs. Among them were his older hits, "Run for the Roses" and "Leader of the Band" and some of his newer songs of his album Windows and Walls.

At one point in the evening, Fogelberg's quiet personality was revealed when several excited girls screamed, "We love you!" His reply was, "But, you don't even know me."

Most of his concert was spent in constant motion while he sang country, blue grass and rock in an extremely versatile performance. Fans didn't seem to mind or notice his lack of dialogue throughout most of the concert.

During Fogelberg's encore, one band member showed his loyalty for ISU by wearing an ISU football helmet. It was a perfect ending to one of ISU's best-loved VEISHEA concerts.

A 3-D theme of "Diverse, Daring and Dynamic" would be difficult for any event to live up to, but Residence Hall Week 1984 was able to do just that.

Residence Hall Week gives high school seniors a chance to experience college life and brings dorm residents together for a fun-filled week of activities.

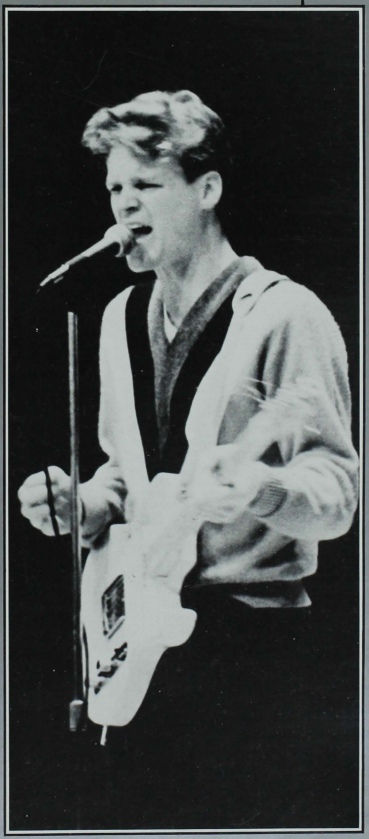

More than 600 high school seniors arrived Sunday, April 8, for a look at ISU. Their college hosts had a number of events planned to keep the seniors busy. Barbara Mandrell was in concert at Hilton Coliseum and a half-hour fireworks display lit up the sky over the Maple-Willow- Larch intramural field. Keeping with the theme, a 3-D movie, "It Came from Outer Space," was shown at the Memorial Union.

Monday gave the high school students a chance to take campus tours and attend classes. A dance was held in the Union, and at midnight, a mass campaniling was scheduled to initiate the high school seniors as official co-eds a few months early.

The seniors went back to high school on Tuesday, but the activities continued. That afternoon Mary Shaver of Miller House won the talent show at the M-Shop with a gymnastics and dance routine.

Wednesday night, dorm residents flocked to Campus-town to take advantage of specials during "RHW — a Night on the Town." The Family Feud Finals were held Thursday night. Dorm residents formed "families" to compete in a take-off of the popular television game show. The winning family was "Relatives Your Mother Never Told You About."

In addition to the major events, intramural activities such as tug-o-war, races, volleyball and weightlifting were held. And to keep residents informed, seminars on residence-hall life were given.

Dorm residents didn't need 3-D glasses to enjoy all of the events during RHW 1984. But with or without them, it's not hard to see what makes Residence Hall Week worth celebrating.

Focusing on the visual, literary and performing arts was the emphasis of FOCUS WEEK, an annual festival in April for promoting the increased appreciation of art at Iowa State University. Creativity, aesthetics and freedom of expression were the backbone which has made FOCUS WEEK a success year after year.

Last year, twenty-six students were funded by ISU for projects ranging from painting to dancing and literature. FOCUS WEEK was created specifically to make available to students, visual and performing art which otherwise would not have been funded and brought to campus.

Many categories were offered in the three areas. Visual arts included painting, drawing, weaving, sculpture, calligraphy, jewelry and photography. Music, dance and drama were all parts of the performing arts. The literary arts categories were fiction, poetry and critical essay.

FOCUS WEEK has been made possible each year through the FOCUS committee which consisted of a combination of approximately 30 students, staff and faculty in 1983.

The FOCUS projects were judged by qualified and respected persons in each area. Richard Von Grabow, Burdette Smythe and Bruce Degen judged the music categories. The Director of the Gallery of Art at the University of Northern Iowa in Cedar Falls, Don Stetson, judged the visual arts categories. Theresa Pappas who has taught creative writing, literature and composition at Iowa State University, Community College of Baltimore and John Hopkins University judged the Literary Arts categories.

Awards Night was held April 16 with Robert Lindemeyer (Media Resources) as the Master of Ceremonies. Here, formal recognition for the creative efforts of the Iowa State students who submitted entries to the juried competition was given. The expressive poetry, music and dance performances along with a slide presentation of the winners of the juried competition made it a night to remember.

The awards for the 1983-84 school year were given to the following students:

GOOD NEWS

Hearts pounded as the deep red lights pulsated to the drum's rhythmic beat. The blood pressure of the zealous crowd soared in anticipation of his appearance. In a flash of light Huey Lewis joined the News as they pumped out "Heart of Rock and Roll" to a sell-out crowd. Without resting a beat, the News cruised into "Change of Heart."

Lewis, clad in a sleeveless t-shirt, jeans and boots, accepted a bandana and a rose from members of the front rows that had left their seats to crowd around the stage. Often times it seemed the estatic crowd was louder than the band, especially when Lewis donned a pair of sunglasses to do "Heart and Soul." Showing off his performing abilities, Lewis kept good contact with the audience in the front, bolted to the tops of the speakers to bring himself closer to the cheers from the parquet and didn't forget those fans dancing in their seats behind stage.

Lewis' band, The News, had fun playing tune after tune. They gave their instruments a chance to cool when they joined Lewis in an acappella, "They Say It's Alright". Lewis didn't hesitate to give some of the spotlight to lead guitarist Chris Hayes, who set the crowd wild with his talent. Drummer Benny Gibson rocked the Coliseum with his solo. Lewis also showed his instrumental abilities on the harmonica during "Working For a Living."

Shouts of "Huey" brought the band back for an encore during which Lewis asked the audience if they wanted to go home. Answering an emphatic "No," Lewis asked what they did want. It was unanimous — "A New Drug" — and Lewis obliged.

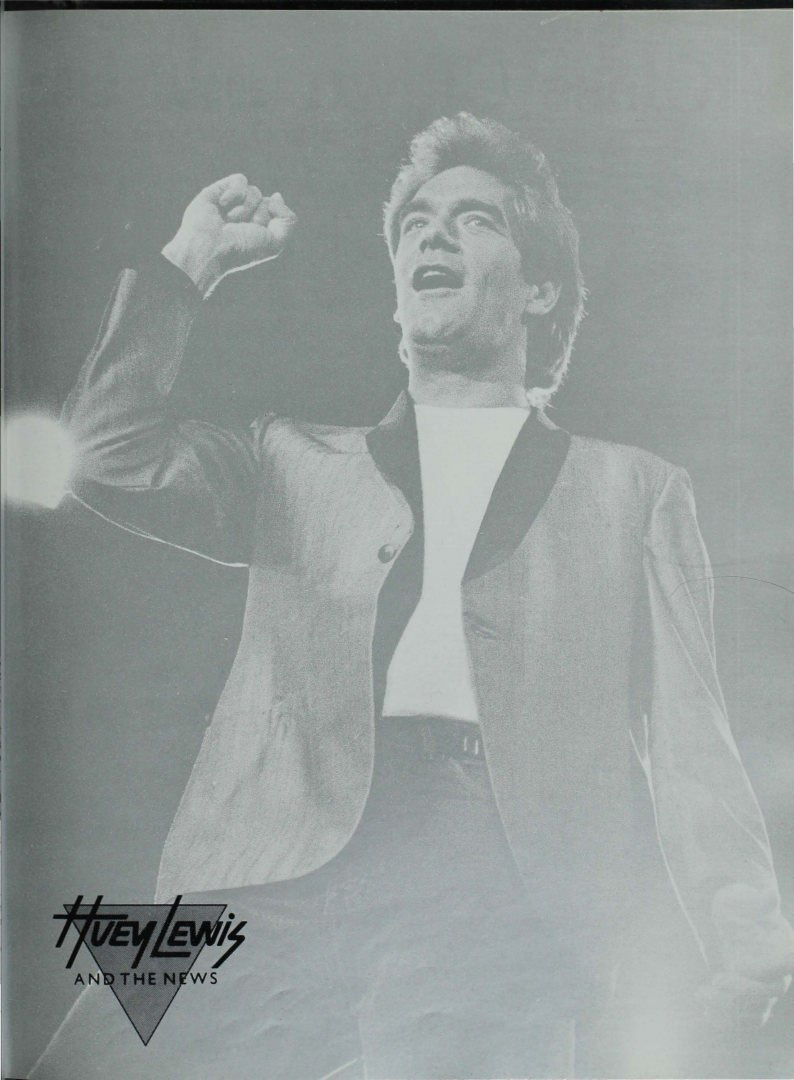

After the encore bic lighters lit the way for those who dared to doubt he would be back again. But Lewis waved a white towel of truce from behind the amplifier and the crowd went crazy. After playing "Hope You Love Me Like You Say You Do" Lewis ended the evening with one he wanted to do, "Bad Is Bad."

Part of the credit for a fired up audience went to Doctor Gonzo and his prescription for a good time — laughter. Gonzo's comedy routine included impersonations of Tom T. Hall, Scooby Doo and the Cars singing "Santa Claus is Coming to Town."

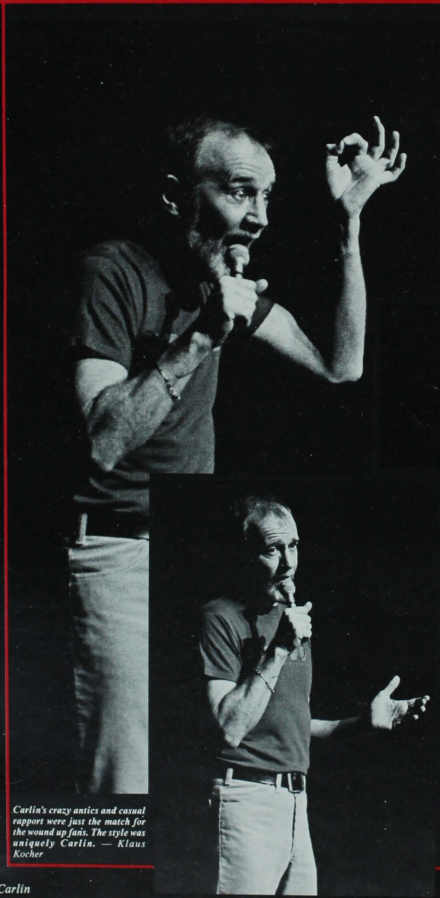

His offbeat humor kept the audience entertained from Hee-Haw jokes to Cinderella jokes.

Huey Lewis and the News along with Doctor Gonzo was a sure cure for the back to school blahs.

Class Clown

Carlin's crazy antics and casual rapport were just the match for the wound up fans. The style was uniquely Carlin. — Klaus Kocher

"Have you ever poured glue on a bird? Of course not! There's no reason to.

"Have you ever noticed mice have no shoulders?

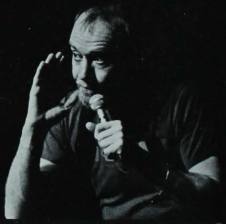

"I've made a discovery.. A cat will blink when hit with a hammer . . . and it's a l-o-n-g blink."

George Carlin brought these words of wisdom and much more of his unmistakable humor to a full house at C.Y. Stephens Auditorium, Saturday, April 14.

Carlin cleared up any confusion the audience had about baseball and football. Baseball, a game with a picnic atmosphere, is played on diamond. Football, a war game, is played on a GRID IRON. In baseball you wear a cap. In football you wear a HELMET. In baseball you make an error. In football you commit a PENALTY.

Carlin also raised a new controversial issue: Plant Abuse. He described the mental torture many plants are put through.

"How do we know hanging plants aren't scared shtless up there?" Carlin asked the crowd.

Carlin urged the need to keep people alert and on their toes. Some of his suggestions? Back out of a drive-through bank. When someone asks if they can buy you a drink, politely reply, "No, but can I have the money instead."

Even Carlin's musical talent came through in his short song "Old McDonald Had a Stroke."

He pondered with the audience on everyday issues.

"Have you ever tried to f-rt and sneeze at the same time?

"Do you realize that Ex-Lax is just old, stale chocolate that gives you the runs?

"Have you noticed when you're driving that anyone driving slower than you is an idiot. And anyone driving faster than you is a maniac?"

But finally he gave the crowd what they had been waiting for. He brought the audience to their feet with his newly revised, ever-growing, infamous list of impolite words. This fast-sped machine-gun delivery of terms got Carlin arrested in Milwaukee in 1972. It got him a standing ovation in Ames.

Freak Week

Freak Week was brought to a new high this year as several hundred participants gathered at the daily activities. The week came about through the Iowa Public Interest Research Group (PIRG) as a "celebration of alternatives" for those people not associated with residence halls or Greek Living, as said by Mike Reilly, one of three organizers of the week this year.

Freak Week is a time that has been directed in the past by NORML, the National Organization for Reforming Marijuana Laws, and has been organized fund-free for approximately eight years. During Freak Week bands volunteer to play on central campus at noon every day, along with "Freak Week Saturday" at the Arboetum where t-shirts are sold and people play frisbee and hacky-sack and lounge in the sun. Reilly said the committee has "thought about moving it somewhere else but the Arboretum is so fitting . . . it's a nice open park with a lot of space. And also, good weather is always guaranteed on Freak Week Saturday — never have we had rain!"

Several bands that donated their music were the Redz Band and Mother John. Basically, the only funds needed were to rent sound systems for the bands and a generator for electricity on Freak Week Saturday since there are no power outlets at the Arboetum. The funds for this were raised in part through a hacky-sackathon.

Freak Week will no longer be put on by NORML, a new local group called DECRIM will be sponsoring it from now on. DECRIM stands for Drive to Educate Citizens Regarding Iowa and Marijuana.

As far as Freak Week for next year goes, Reilly said, "It's going to happen again. We've thought about innovating it and doing something unique. DECRIM wants to do a service project of some sort for drug awareness, along with the drug awareness, along with the drug awareness programs by Office of Student Life."

Regarding Freak Week, Reilly says, "It's a good chance to get everyone together to have a good time, and it's for everybody, not just freaks!"

CELEBRATION

O·F A D·R·E·A·M C·O·M·E T·R·U·E

The Iowa State Center was a place of celebration in 1984. The year marked the 15th anniversary of C. Y. Stephens Auditorium and the 10th for Fisher Theater.

Multi-talented performer Steve Allen appeared for the celebration. Allen's witty performance and relaxed manner made the evening like visiting with a long-time friend. Following Allen's performance, guests enjoyed an open house in the lobby, complete with hors d'oeuvres, balloons and dancing to the tunes of a three-piece combo.

Iowa State University Theatre kicked off its 10th season at Fisher with a production of The Dining Room, a 1981 off-Broadway release. Before the play, invited guests enjoyed complimentary champagne and viewed memorabilia from past productions that was displayed in the lobby.

Many guests at the two celebrations remembered back to when Iowa State Center was very much a dream.

Long-felt dissatisfaction with facilities for cultural events on the ISU campus found a voice in the administration of President James H. Hilton. As he began his second year as Iowa State's president, Dr. Hilton told a 1954 faculty meeting that a complex he called the "Iowa State College Center" was badly needed. He showed the faculty an architects concept of the center and admitted that the dream would take many years to materialize.

By 1955, "Hilton's Dream" had begun. In that year a steering committee was formed and in 1958 the Iowa State University Foundation was established with the Iowa State Center as its primary goal. In 1962, a nationwide network of volunteers began a national fundraising campaign.

Chairman of the campaign was C. Y. Stephens, operator of a large dairy enterprise in the Washington D.C. area. Stephens made an initial contribution of $1 million to give impetus to the campaign, and subsequent income raised the value of his gift to $2.5 million.

In addition to C. Y. Stephens Auditorium and Fisher Theater (pictured) the Iowa State Center includes Hilton Coliseum and the Scheman Continuing Education Building.

In December of 1971, the James H. Hilton Coliseum was formally opened, honoring the man who had envisioned the 76-acre complex. The 14,000-seat Coliseum provides exceptional quarters for commencements, indoor athletics, large meetings and arena-type entertainment.

The Scheman Continuing Education Building was added to serve the University's educational program of short courses and conferences to complete the performing arts complex. With its opening in September of 1975, the dream expressed some 21 years earlier was fulfilled.

The four buildings, inter-connected with elevated walkways, are a $19.5 million development achieved without the use of state or federal monies. Stephens Auditorium, Fisher Theater and the Scheman Building were financed by contributions of friends and alumni totaling more than $11 million. Hilton Coliseum was built with gifts and bonds at a cost of over $8 million. — Stuart Roy

BARBARA'S BACK

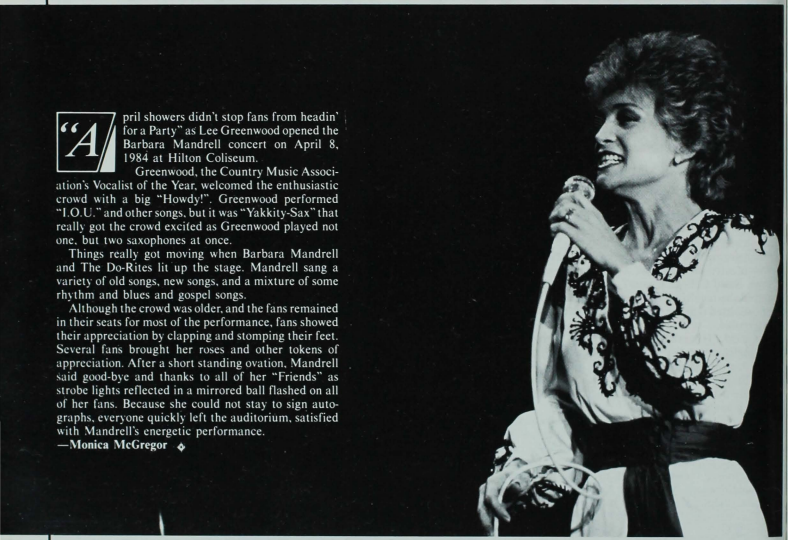

"April showers didn't stop fans from headin' for a Party" as Lee Greenwood opened the Barbara Mandrell concert on April 8, 1984 at Hilton Coliseum.

Greenwood, the Country Music Association's Vocalist of the Year, welcomed the enthusiastic crowd with a big "Howdy!". Greenwood performed "I.O.U." and other songs, but it was "Yakkity-Sax" that really got the crowd excited as Greenwood played not one, but two saxophones at once.

Things really got moving when Barbara Mandrell and The Do-Rites lit up the stage. Mandrell sang a variety of old songs, new songs, and a mixture of some rhythm and blues and gospel songs.

Although the crowd was older, and the fans remained in their seats for most of the performance, fans showed their appreciation by clapping and stomping their feet. Several fans brought her roses and other tokens of appreciation. After a short standing ovation, Mandrell said good-bye and thanks to all of her "Friends" as strobe lights reflected in a mirrored ball flashed on all of her fans. Because she could not stay to sign autographs, everyone quickly left the auditorium, satisfied with Mandrell's energetic performance.

CLOSE ENOUGH TO PERFECT

— Klaus Kocher

Alabama may be Southern born and Southern bred, but it doesn't have to show in their concert when the group gave a mix of soft ballads and up-beat country rock Saturday, February 11, 1984, at Hilton Coliseum.

The concert was non-stop excitement with great music from their album Roll On which was also the title of their tour.

The 2½ hour show began with "The Closer You Get." Jeff Clark, Teddy Gentry, Randy Owen and Mark Herndon offered treats such as a triple play on the three cousin's guitars as they lined up and each played another man's guitar. Herndon, drummer, added his voice for the first and last time in the song "If You're Gonna Play Texas." It also proved to the audience that not just Texans love to dance.

The ballad "The Boy" was Gentry's turn to sing lead. He explained he had written a song for his daughter and for three years unsuccessfully tried to write one for his boy. Finally, on a tour bus in 1983, Owen and publicist Greg Fowler wrote a song that pleased Gentry.

Hundreds of butane lighters began to flicker as the opening notes played "Old Flame" and didn't extinguish until the final notes faded away.

Gentry's opening harmonica solo for "Mountain Music" was overtaken by the crowds biggest response of the evening when they were on their feet stomping and clapping.

The group took bows and left the stage, but the crowd wanted more and shouts of "Bama" brought the entertainers of the year back for four more songs ending appropriately with "My Home's In Alabama."

The group showed excellence in harmony and instrumentals. Fine versatility by Cook was seen as he moved from fiddle to keyboards to guitar as well as offering his vocal talents. Herndon, an excellent musician, was the driving force for the band and kept the crowd excited throughout the concert.

Alabama showed their appreciation for their fans when they bought radio time on two local stations the next day. The message was, "a great big thank you" to the fans and ended with, "We love you all from the Alabama group."

HANDICAPPED

"I stand as an advocate for families," said Fern Kuper as she told her story of her severely retarded son, Zach. Kuper's lecture was part of a series for Handicapped Awareness Days. Her strong support for families began when she spotted an article in Redbook magazine, that was written by a mother who proclaimed that her retarded child was a special gift from God.

Kuper wrote to Redbook telling readers that she too had a retarded child, but was miserable and didn't see him as a special child. She couldn't handle an eight year old infant. The only answer was to send him away to an institution. Expecting bad reviews from readers, Kuper was surprised when other readers responded with the same proclamation. Shortly after placing Zach in an institution, Kuper realized that it did not get any easier, only more difficult.

Having a retarded child, according to Kuper, changes all the relationships you have with people. She says her relationships with friends changed as she no longer interacted with her regular friends. She sought out other parents with handicapped children. She isolated herself and became extremely lonely. Her relationship with her family changed because they couldn't enjoy her brother's children as much. Kuper saw her nephew, who was the same age as Zach, [illegible] brother had to accept the fact that she'd [illegible] have her own new-phew. As far as Zach is concerned, Kuper will always experience an internal mourning. "It's hard to accept the fact that you're never going to have the child that you hoped and planned for." Kuper also changed her views toward the world, "I no longer get upset over the small things in life." She pointed out that spilling milk or tracking dirt in on the carpet are miniscule compared to having a retarded child. Kuper admitted to spoiling her daughter because everyday she is thankful for having one healthy child.

Kuper concluded the lecture by giving advice to the professionals who work with retarded children. She said professionals have to be careful not to judge the parents just because they placed their child in a home. Placing a child in a home doesn't mean you no longer love him. It's like putting an elderly parent in a nursing home. You don't do it because you want them out of the way, but because you aren't able to care for them yourself. Zach had become too much to handle; he needed to be held all the time and constantly cared for. She's satisfied knowing that Zach is being cared for by people who really care for him and are able to take care of him in the best way.

Her only advice to parents who have handicapped children and are afraid to place them in a home because of the criticism they might receive, is "You have to do what is right to have the strength to say 'this is what I want.'"

AWARENESS DAYS

— Melisa Weigle

The Des Moines Roadrunners challenged an Iowa State basketball team to a little one-on-one and beat ISU by over 40 points. Just an ordinary basketball game, right? Yes, if you consider playing a basketball game from the confines of a wheelchair just ordinary.

The Roadrunners are a group of amputees, paraplegics and quadruplegics who enjoy sports and want a chance to participate in a team atmosphere, namely basketball.

This game was one of the events scheduled for Handicapped Awareness Days. "It's ability, not disability that counts," said Ron Carter, coach of the Des Moines Roadrunners. His basketball team, which began back in 1967, has played all over the Midwest to show that handicapped people can do the same things able-bodied people can. They, however, do it just a little bit differently.

Wheelchair basketball got its start after World War II. The men who came back from the war handicapped needed something to do for recreation. In Los Angeles, a group of determined veterans got together for a friendly game of basketball played in the confines of their wheelchairs. The group in L.A. named themselves the Flying Wheels and their tradition of handicapped people participating in sports has continued every since.

Carter got involved in wheelchair basketball when he was asked to get a team started in Des Moines. His first reaction was one of surprise. "The first thing I said was 'what?' I had always been involved in handicapped sports but was not sure about a game of wheelchair basketball," said Carter.

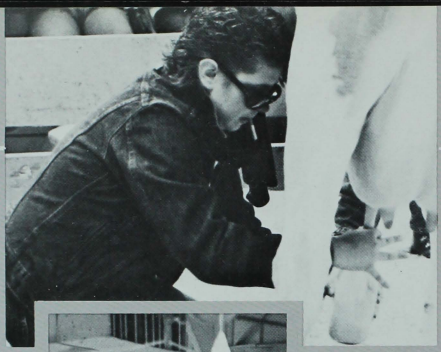

For him, wheelchair basketball is more than just a pastime. "It really is a rewarding experience. Just to see these guys out on the floor will make you quit feeling sorry for yourself."

Cliff Campbell, who could easily be compared to Meadowlark Lemon of the Globe Trotters, began playing with the team back in 1974. On the floor, Campbell covers both ends of the court with tremendous speed and skill, as well as shooting ability. Yet, when he's away from the basketball court he's not away from sports.

"Lately, I've been competing in a lot of 10K and 20K runs. My biggest goal right now in life is to run in the Boston Marathon," Campbell said.

Campbell also participates in track and field whenever possible. His favorite events are the pslons, javelin throw and 200 meter runs. The biggest disappointment for the team is the fact that there is not much enthusiasm about handicapped sports and sporting events. But if the Des Moines Roadrunners are any indication of the enthusiasm that handicapped people have about sports, it won't be too long before that enthusiasm rubs off on the rest of the community.

"Come on Bessey!" Is it Mom calling her kid in for dinner? No. It's the Milkmaid contestants telling their cows to give more milk.

The Milkmaid Contest was an event held during Parent's Weekend 1984. Nearly 1,000 parents came to Ames to see their children. Ames' hotels were full by early this fall for the weekend and many parents stayed in Ankeny, Boone or even Des Moines.

The Student Alumni Association sponsored the event which included a buffet before the football game against West Texas State. ISU won 14-0 to a sellout crowd. Mr. and Mrs. Beer of Ogden were presented with the Parent's of the Year Award during halftime of the game.

There was also an ISU legacy reception, a postgame buffet, a moonlight dance and the production of "The Dining Room."

Parents' Weekend 1984 A Time Together

An event that has been around for more than 50 years and attracts alumni is Alumni Days. Members of classes holding their 50th, 55th, 60th, 65th, 70th and 75th year reunions were in attendance. The alumni were at ISU the weekend of June 7-9. The class of 1909, celebrating its 75th reunion, had one woman in attendance.

The activitivies began on Thursday with open houses in the various departments and campus tours. The tours offered the alumni the chance to refamiliarize themselves with the campus and see the buildings that have been built since they left. In the evening there was a dance held in the Great Hall of the Memorial Union.

An important event during Alumni Days was the dedication of the William Robert Parks and Ellen Sorge Parks Library, on Friday, June 8. Named in honor of ISU's current president and his wife, by the State Board of Regents, the Parks Library now consists of the original structure built in 1925 and additions completed in 1961, 1969, and the recent $8 million tradition that nearly doubled the size of the facility. In the afternoon the alumni were entertained by President Parks at a reception held at the Knoll.

The Alumni Art Show in the Memorial Union, campus and departmental tours each day, several luncheons for the alumni and a concert on the Stanton Memorial Carillon, highlighted the activities held during the week.

THE MAINTENANCE SHOP

TERRACE PARTIES!

ISU students have a new institution, Terrace parties! Though the Maintenance Shop has been on campus for 11 years, terrace parties are only three years old.

So, what's a terrace party? It's a fun way for more than 2,000 people to spend a Friday afternoon. Eight times a year, from noon until 6 p.m., beer, pop and bratwurst are sold and bands play on the terrace west of the Memorial Union.

The parties are sponsored by the M-Shop. Bob Hanson, coordinator of events, said there are two bands scheduled for each party. "A local band plays from noon until two and an out-of-town band plays from three to six." Party bands are picked from those Hanson has heard in other bars or from bands that have played at the M-Shop before. "We've had bands from Minneapolis, Chicago and Waterloo this fall," Hanson said.

Terrace parties are held three times in the fall, three times in the spring and twice in the summer. Last summer, a special pool party was held on the terrace. Mike Miller, bar manager, said, "We raided the toy stores in Ames for all of their inflatable children's pools. People sat around in the pools and we played Beach Boys music all day."

It hasn't always been hot and sunny for the terrace parties. In 1985, the parties may be scheduled earlier in the fall to avoid the cold weather. Hanson said a couple of the parties had to be cut an hour short because of rain. "So far, we've only had to move one terrace party inside. That's no fun because people wait for over an hour to get inside," Hanson said.

What is it that makes so many people attend terrace parties? Here are a few answers:

"I get to see all my friends and talk about the past week."

"It's a great way to start a weekend."

"Then I don't have to go to my afternoon classes."

"It's more relaxed and informal than the bars."

"The bands play great music."

COULD IT BE A NEW TRADITION AT ISU?

Renaissance Revisited

Each January, the Memorial Union is transformed into an Elizabethan banquet hall for the Madrigal Dinner, a holiday tradition at ISU for the past 19 years.

The dinner was a musical and theatrical journey to the past, filled with the pomp and pageantry of the holiday season of Renaissance England.

Carl Bleyle, professor of music history and the person in charge of the dinner since its second year, said it is essentially the same from year to year.

"The idea of the dinner is to bring noblemen to the king's court for a state banquet, primarily so the king can show off. It is a very festive occasion," Bleyle said.

Bleyle is also the director of Musica Antiqua, a group that performs music of the era on reproductions of period instruments. Musica Antiqua provided accompaniment for the ISU Chamber Singers who performed the madrigals from which the dinner gets its name.

Madrigals, the popular songs of the day, were lyric poems set to music. At first they were a private form of entertainment for lords and ladies, often performed during dinner.

Other entertainment featured in the three-hour dinner included dance of the Renaissance provided by Orchesis 2, an ISU dance group, and acts provided by court jesters, magicians and wenches. The wenches roamed the audience flirting with males in attendance.

Throughout the evening, trumpet fanfares announced important events like the bringing in of the different courses of the meal.

The Madrigal Dinner was formal in the sense of drama, but informal in its presentation. Although informal, authenticity and attention to detail were carefully taken into account.

The elegant costumes were carefully researched and designed to be like those of the King James period.

Banners, family crests, greenery and hundred of candles made the Great Hall equally as elegant. The candlelight ws especially beautiful when the flaming plum pudding was brought in for dessert.

The Madrigal Dinner was a wonderful journey back to Renaissance England.

As the Memorial Union resident Summer Theatre began its second decade of entertainment, arts director Scott Smith slated a high-powered schedule of performances, including three plays just off Broadway, for his finale at ISU.

MURST opened the season with the popular 1979 Neil Simon musical They're Playing Our Song. About the romance between a songwriter and a lyricist, it starred veteran MURST actors Maria Travaille Osborn (Sonia Walsk) and William Myatt (Vernon Gersch). The audience was captivated by the couple's alter egos that made the lovers take an honest look at their sensible, sexual and professional sides.

The alter egos were played by Victoria Hoffman, Kimberlee Jo Stiles, Marguerite Bennet Folger, Alan Hooks, Kevin Jay Jones and Fred Clark Jr. The six were also responsible for moving sets and props between scenes. Done in a unique style, it added much to the performance.

One contingency of MURST is to "present current shows that somehow tie in with the university's mission of seeking knowledge about ourselves and the world," according to Smith.

"Crimes of the Heart" did just that. They play focused on the three McGrath sisters who were brought together by a shooting in the family after being separated for five years. The play carried each of the sisters through their quest for love and security and the search for belonging.

The three sisters, Hoffman (Meg), Osborn (Babe) and Stiles (Lenny) were excellent in portraying the unique personality of their own character while complementing those of their sisters'.

Smith worked over a year at acquiring production rights to this Pulizer Prize winning play by Beth Henley. "Crimes of the Heart" closed on Broadway just weeks before the Ames premiere.

Humor made the play a success. A light-hearted look at realistic, serious themes of everyday life made the experience enjoyable in spite of its seriousness.

"Cloud Nine" was a high-class parody of sexual relations contrasting values of the Victorian British with those of contemporary society. It was filled with statements about individuality and roles. The play was unique in that each actor played completely different roles in the first and second acts — often of the opposite sex! The result was both believable and entertaining.

Sister Mary Ignatius Explains it All and An Actor's Nightmare, produced together, made for an unusual and fun evening of theatre. Sister Mary met opposition from her former students on the play as well as opposition from members of the Ames community that felt the biting satire of the Catholic church was inappropriate. J. Sue Leonard (Sister Mary Ignatius) enlightened us, with perfect mannerisms, on the basics of the Catholic faith. Sister Mary was light-hearted until she was visited by former students who taught her a lesson about the real world outside the walls of the church. The play satirized the blind faith people have in institutions.

An Actor's Nightmare was a humorous account of a poor accountant who stumbled into a theatre three minutes before curtain time, only to be mistaken for the main character of several plays he did not know. Myatt did a commendable job as the confused "actor."

The familiar children's story The Emperor's New Clothes by Hans Christian Anderson was a new twist for the MURST season. The story was set in the Tokugawa period of the 16th century, a time when class hierarchy and feudalism dominated society.

The Emperor's New Clothes was performed at six Sunday matinees and appealed to young and old alike. The audience was appreciative of the illustrious costumes and the intricate screen background. Actors and audience alike had to adjust to conventions of the Japanese Kabuki Theatre.

MURST ended on a different note — the notes of French composer Jacques Brel in the musical Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris, beautiful directed and choreographed by Marguerite Bennett Folger.

Clark, Hooks, Myatt, Jones, Hoffman, Osborn and Stiles performed a beautiful collection of Brel's music. It was a full evening of relaxing, enjoyable, and often powerful song and dance. The actors performed Brel's often difficult solos and ensembles about people and their sorrows, loves and fears.

This year's MURST season will be a hard act to follow.

When in Ames do as the Greeks do. During Greek Week at least. "Together with Pride" was the theme around which the Greek Olympics, college bowl trivia contest, service projects, vespers, basketball, blood drive and the torchlight ceremony were formed.

New events this year included a statewide racquetball tournament and a 4k/10k run for charity.

Greek Week provides an opportunity for high school students to visit ISU and stay in the fraternities and sororities. The events planned during the week involve the entire Greek System and when the high school students come on the weekend, the Greek Olympics, Greek Sing competition and Convocations take place.

Lori Magill, general co-chair for Greek Week 1984, said, "Greek Week is a week filled with activities designed to promote unity among the Greek houses and provide insight to anyone interested in the Greek System."

The Torchlight and Kickoff marked the beginning of the week-long celebration throughout the Greek system. To get started on the right note, the All-Greek Choir, consisting of two members from each sorority and one member from each fraternity, provided some musical entertainment. Their selections, "Let the Sunshine In," "I'll Remember You" and "Brothers and Sisters" kept the crowd enthusiastic.

The most important part of the night was the induction of new members into the Order of Omega. This award honors those juniors and seniors who have at least a 2.80 GPA, a strong moral character, leadership positions in both the Greek and community involvements and who have contributed positively to the ISU community. This year 19 people were inducted into the Order of Omega.

Vespers was held at St. Thomas Aquinas Church on Monday night. Men and women gathered together for the inspirational ceremony aimed at promoting unity among the Greeks.

Guest speaker, Florence Miner, a former Delta Zeta member at the University of Illinois and now a part of ISU's Greek community, commented on her life as a member during the "Roaring 20's." She compared her life then to the Greek life today. Most importantly, she told the congregation that they must be motivated to be

VEISHEA 1984:

Let's go to the Movies

veishea fun for everyone

Those who attended the VEISHEA parade this year got to see a multitude of colors — in the floats. Last years' spectators saw only brightly colored umbrellas among floats whose paint was running and students looking a little "under the weather."

After endless tiring but fun hours of work on VEISHEA floats, the parade was ready to begin with the theme "Let's Go to the Movies." Entrants this year ranged from children riding in wagons to large floats that were built using budgets up to $10,000.

Awards are presented in three different divisions of float size, plus a President's Award, which went to Phi Kappa Psi and Chi Omega for "The Muppet Movie," the VEISHEA Central Committee Award which went to "Winnie the Pooh" by Pi Kappa Alpha and Kappa Delta and the Parade Marshal's Award which went to Delta Tau Delta and Delta Delta Delta for "The Toy."

In the small float division, "Aristocats" by Alpha Tau Omega and Alpha Omicron Pi received first place. "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" took first place in the medium division and was produced by Theta Delta Chi and Delta Zeta. "Delectable Delights" was built by Tau Kappa Epsilon and Kappa Alpha Theta and received first place in the large float division.

The Alpha Tau Omega's and Alpha Omicron Pi's spent at least 4000 man-hours to produce their prize winning float. Sarah Benesh, co-chair for the float said, "It takes whole house participation to make something like this successful. There are always people who help for half an hour then drink beer, but it's the people who put in hours at a time of hard work, who make up for those who have other committments."

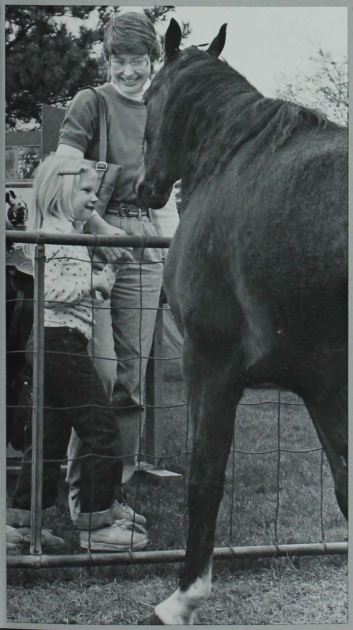

Anybody wondering what happens to a float when the parade is over? People dismantle pieces, keep some for the memories and burn the rest. —Jean M. Otteson

VEISHEA at ISU is best known for its elaborate parade and Stars Over Veishea musical production. But several other features also make it a great time to visit campus.

A popular attraction is food. The famous VEISHEA Cherry Pies were sold in MacKay Hall. Students in hotel, restaurant and institution management sold the pies for 55 cents each. The Dairy Science Club's traditional homemade ice cream was sold and highlighted the 60 years of progress in the dairy industry.

Children and adults alike had opportunity to participate in the variety of activities during VEISHEA. ISU's Geology Club students demonstrated four different methods for finding gold. One way involved dumping buckets of sand and river water on a sluice table. The heavy metals and sand would catch on the wooden slats raised slightly above the table. The original tables were about 250-feet long and were assembled in parts at the bottom of a stream. This was one of the ways miners looked for gold during the middle-to-late 1800's.

The popular petting zoo attracted many children to visit the lambs, puppies, kittens, piglets and calves. This event was sponsored by the College of Veterinary Medicine's anatomy laboratory.

Another fun event for children was the "Development Under the Big Top." Story reading, puppetry, face painting, dressing up as circus characters and many games were all coordinated by the Child Development Club.

While Iowa was snow covered, the Horticulture Club was busy growing plants and flowers. They sold corsages and gave tours of greenhouses containing a collection of lush and exotic plants.

These are just some of the highlights which were sponsored by the more than 25 ISU clubs and organizations during VEISHEA. Iowa State University certainly prides itself in offering something for everyone.

sigma chi DERBY DAYS

20 YEARS

Sigma Chi held their annual Derby Days fundraiser in September. They raised over $5000 for their national philanthrophy.

The overall winner of Derby Days was Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority. Second place went to Alpha Omicron Pi and third place to Alpha Chi Omega.

Thirteen sororities participated in the five-day event which began with a banquet Tuesday for the Derby Days coaches and the Derby Darling candidates.

Wednesday night was Derby Days Bar Night at Granddaddy's and a pledge bar night was held at the Sigma Chi house for those who were under 19 years old.

On Thursday, the 36-hour trampoline marathon began. Each sorority had two one-hour time blocks during which they had to come and sign in and jump.

Saturday brought the Derby Days Olympics with events such as the water balloon toss, the baby bottle chug, the dizzy bat relay and the egg joust. A new event, the Ugly Pledge Contest, was also held on Saturday. Each house had half an hour to create the ugliest pledge they could. The ugly pledges were provided by the Sigma Chi Pledge class. Finally, Saturday night was the Derby Days party which was a huge success.

Derby Days underwent some changes this year which helped to make this one of the most successful and fun years.

The Derby Darlings contest was run a little differently this year. A booth was set up in the Memorial Union and people were free to come in and vote for their choice by making a donation. Whichever candidate had the most donations won. This year's Derby Darling was Carla Officer from Kappa Kappa Gamma. The donation system was very successful, raising a total of $550.

Bar night was also handled differently. In past years, participation was based on attendance at Granddaddy's. This year, however, participation was based on the number of Derby Day's cups each house bought. A total of 750 cups were sold, a lot more than in previous years.

The derby snatch was another event which was brought back to Derby Days this year. Members of Sigma Chi wore derbies on campus and sorority participants had to ask for the derbys and give the Sigma Chis a kiss for the derby. Different derbies had different point totals. Black derbies were worth one point, green worth three points, and red worth ten points.

Derby Days is a national fundraiser which all Sigma Chi chapters participate in. All the money raised goes to their national philanthropy, Welch Village, which is an institution for children with minimal brain damage. The village is in Bloomfield, Colorado. Last year, $36,000 was raised and this year they hope to do even better.

Sigma Chis have an extra special incentive to raise more money this year. Mr. Huntsman, a prominent Colorado businessman and Sigma Chi alum, saw a slide show which described what Sigma Chis were doing to help Welch Village. Huntsman, who is the father of a retarded baby, was very touched by the slide show. He proposed what is called the Huntsman Challenge. He said that if all 186 chapters could raise a record $45,000, he would match that amount and donate it to Welch Village. —Kathy Egan

In a musty sewer hideout escaping the law's eyes, a group of young men squat on the floor, absorbed in an illegal game of craps. Not far away, a company of scantily clad women parade in low-cut lingerie and fishnet stockings, enticing the fantasties of every man in town.

What is this scandalous business going on at ISU? It's all part of Stars Over VEISHEA's 1984 production of "Guys and Dolls," the popular broadway musical based on a short story by Damon Runyon. It's an action-packed story of a devoted gambler throwing in his dice for the affections of a do-good missionary. Coming to life on the stage are such unforgettable characters as gamblers Nathan Detroit and Sky Masterson, the voluptuous Miss Adelaide, and the pure and devout Sarah Brown.

The student-produced show Stars Over VEISHEA made its debut during the first VEISHEA in 1922 as "The Night Show." The productions were moved outside to Clyde Williams Field in 1939, and thus came the name Stars Over VEISHEA. The name remains today, even though SOV has taken the stage in C.Y. Stephens Auditorium. —Beth Wilson ◆

For women who make non-traditional choices about their future, there are many opportunities as well as obstacles. "Breaking Barriers," the theme for the 1984 Women's Week in October, brought in speakers, sponsored events and provided literature to celebrate the 11th year of Women's Week.

Speakers included Janet Guthrie, race car driver; Ntozake Shange, award-winning playwright; Mary Louise Smith, former national chairperson of the Republican Party; Minnette Doderer, state representative in Iowa, and Gloria Steinem, editor and writer for Ms. Magazine.

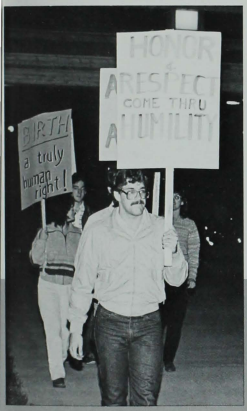

Steinem's lecture, "Everyday Rebellions," was the best attended of the lectures. She was available for autographing her first book "Outrageous Acts and Everyday Rebellion," the afternoon of her lecture. Following the free speech at C.Y. Stephens, a reception was held in her honor.

Events during the week included sales of women's books, t-shirts, buttons and Gloria Steinem posters, a prediction run, films and entertainment by Rosi Gowdey, a popular folk and blues singer.

An event that drew attention was the prediction run. In a prediction run, runners predict their finishing time before they run the race. After the race, the winners are those whose finishing time is the closest to their predicted time.

The coordinators of Women's Week made all events easy for everyone to attend. They made provisions for physically handicapped people and the hearing impaired. Art In Public Space

The First Annual College Of Design Symposium March 26-28 1984

Art in Public Space is a three-day event that was held in commemoration of the first anniversary of the founding of the College of Design.

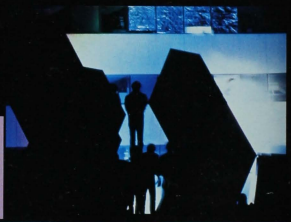

Many outstanding lecturers presented information on permanent and temporary transformations of public space. Most of the activities included workshops about architecture, art landscape planning and creative integrate design.

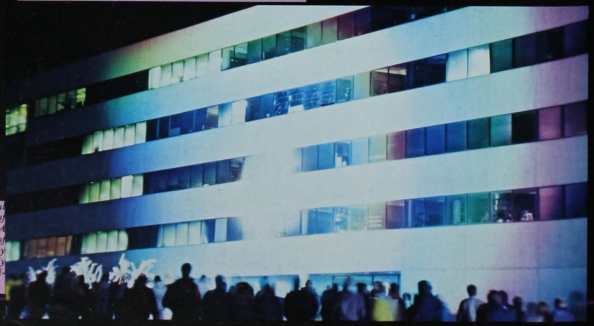

An outdoor laser light show by Dale Eldred, internationally known lighting sculptor, was one of the highlights. The light show took place in front of the Design Center with the building itself used as the screen. Two laser beams flashed across the sky, creating a stage for a Star Wars episode. The laser reflected against the reflective surfaces Eldred had set up in front of the building and created a rainbow image across the building's front.

The audience at the Design Center also saw slides of abstract forms of art, metal and various pieces of junk arranged in an artistic manner. Eldred showed slum areas, run-down tenement buildings and beggars from a different perception.

The majority of the slides, however, concentrated on foreign lands and their people. Eldred focused on the culture of the people, their rituals and celebrations. The highlight of the slide show was in the photos of Las Vegas. The various angles of the lighted signs were refreshing compared to the usual front view. All of Eldred's slides showed the subject matter in at least three different angles, often more than that. This provided a view of the subject that the average person might never see.

The Iowa State Oratorio Choir provided the intermission entertainment by singing the Gloria, the Credo and the Sancto. They ended their performance with the Hallelujah Chorus, all under the direction of Josef Knott. —Julia Ellwanger

A Midsummer Night's Dream

Iowa State University Theatre's production of William Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream was filled with romance and magic.

Set in Athens in an enchanted forest, the play followed three separate stories. The first involved two pairs of lovers, the second a group of tradesmen, and the third revealed Oberon, the king of the fairies, feuding with his queen Titania. The king's jester, Puck, with his magical powers, complicated the lives of all.

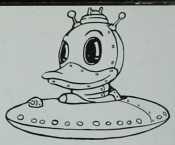

The everchanging plot led to many humorous situations. Hermia loved Lysander but was forced to choose Demetrius, remain celibate, or die. Demetrius did love Hermia, but was loved by Helena instead.

In A Midsummer Night's Dream, Shakespeare examines the ways in which we fall in love, the ways we know we are in love, and through this, encourages us to make decisions of a broader philosophical nature.

Directed by Dr. Patrick Gouran, A Midsummer Night's Dream was ISU's part of the Iowa Shakespeare Festival. As You Like It was produced by the University of Northern Iowa and The Merchant of Venice was produced by the University of Iowa. — Stuart Roy ◇

It's crazy, it's loony, it's zany . . . it's Duck's Breath Mystery Theatre. Insane antics and slapstick shenanigans have made the five-man comedy team well-known from coast to coast.

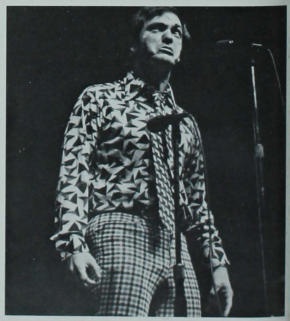

Coming alive on Fisher's stage Oct. 5 was the Godfather — like Mr. Nifty (Bill Allard) and his Vaudeville Calvalcade. Merle Kessler, as folksinger, shared such crowd-pleasing melodies as "Jesus Drives My Semi When I'm Sleeping." Leon Martell, as Mr. Nifty's son-in-law Lonni, came dressed in clashing plaids, checks and stripes and explained that whenever he enters a 24-hour convenience store, the surveillance camera explodes. Completing his attire was a pair of red, white and blue bowling shoes.

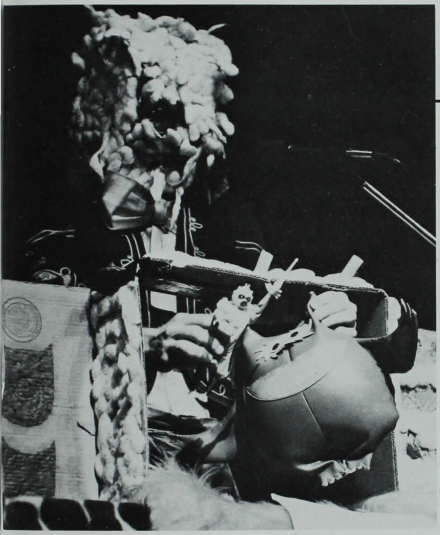

"I always wear bowling shoes," he said. "Everybody should. Then no one can lie about their shoe size."

Jim Turner put on a one-man show — Tommy Dells' Puppet Safari — with a character cast including Mr. Jeff, Mr. Rayon, Mr. Sucker and Mr. Potato Head, all venturing to see the Wizard.

Other acts included a symphonic conduction of the audience singing "Old McDonald Had A Farm," an opera at the used-car lot, and who could forget — the infamous Mr. Science, played by Dan Coffey (Remember, he's got a Master's degree . . . in science!)

Duck's Breath got its start on the University of Iowa campus nearly a decade ago. After local performances, the five U of I theatre graduates headed to San Francisco where they became a Bay area success. A standing ovation welcomed Elton John to Hilton Coliseum on Sept. 22.

The international superstar was both fashionably late and fashionably dressed in a royal blue and black tuxedo with tails. He went immediately to his white baby grand piano and played "Tiny Dancer" for the enthusiastic crowd.

While Elton played what he described as "some old boring stuff and some new boring stuff," the crowd definitely didn't act bored. "Bennie and the Jets" allowed for some audience participation as everyone sang with him. In response, he threw his piano bench on stage, broke it apart and heaved it into the crowd.

Elton played a full 22 songs, including "Rocket Man," during which fog and colored lights created a mood for the hit song. Adding to the list were "Sorry Seems to Be the Hardest Word," "Blue Eyes," "I Guess That's Why They Call It the Blues," "The Bitch Is Back" and "Your Song."

Elton refrained from wearing any of his unique glasses, although he did do some unique things. Toward the end of his concert he was less relaxed and got rather wild. Besides the bench-smashing episode, he danced on his piano and jumped on his guitar player's back. He also did a striptease, taking off a white jacket during one of his two encores and throwing it into the crowd.

Elton's two hour concert came to an end with "Crocodile Rock." The crowd demanded a third encore but were disappointed when the coliseum lights came on. Elton immediately escaped to his waiting helicopter.

Descending the stairs of a two-story revolving stage, Barry Manilow appeared through a colorful fog on Oct. 14 at Hilton Coliseum.

Dancing atop a grand piano, Manilow, full of energy, sang "Come With Me," the first song of his two-set concert.

"I Can't Smile Without You" not only got the audience participating by clapping, but also got one woman on stage to sing with Manilow. She sang well and handled the excitement of being in Manilow's arms calmly.

The second set opened with several songs from his 2 a.m. Paradise Cafe album, including "Big City Blues," "Without Love," and "When October Goes."

Manilow followed up with a dramatic rendition of "Read 'Em And Weep." His grand performance was intensified by impressive lighting effects and a final billow of smoke as he dropped to his knees on the final line of the song.

Manilow continued with big hits like "Even Now," "Copa," "Daybreak" and "I Write The Songs." His excited fans responded with over ten minutes of applause and screaming.

Manilow brought out the ISU Cardinal Keynotes as backup singers for the finale of "One Voice." The concert ended with encores of "I Made It Through The Rain" and "Hot Tonight." — Angie Banowetz

Kenny Rogers, along with Helen Reddy and Eddie Rabbitt, made his fourth appearance in Ames on Oct. 2.

Reddy, dressed in a lavender sequined dress, opened the concert with some of her old numbers, including "Angie Baby," "Delta Dawn," "Ain't No Way to Treat a Lady" and "I Am Woman."

Rabbitt, back on stage after taking a year off to be with his family, introduced songs from his new album Best Year of My Life. Inspiration for many of the songs, Rabbitt explained, came from time spent with his wife and new-born son. He sang more familiar tunes, such as "Every Which Way But Loose," "Drivin' My Life Away," and "I Love A Rainy Night."

Rogers began his performance by thanking the crowd for the over 4,000 pounds of food donated to the Food Bank of Iowa, which distributes food to needy Iowans. Rogers said that per capita, Ames' donation was larger than any other stop on his 74-city tour.

Rogers played such songs as "Reuben James," "You Decorated My Life," "She Believes In Me" and "Ruby, Don't Take Your Love to Town."

Rogers' record company picked Ames to debut a new song, "I Guess I'm Crazy, All I Need Is You." The 17-year-old writer of the song was waiting on the phone to hear the audience's reaction. He didn't have to wait long for the thunderous applause.

Rogers, of course, couldn't leave the stage without including the popular songs "You Are So Beautiful" and "The Gambler." — Monica McGregor

isu homecoming 1984

Turning 30 can be traumatic for some. They'd rather forget about birthdays and stay 29 for awhile.

But when Cy, the ISU mascot, turned 30, all of ISU celebrated.

"Celebrate with Cy" was the theme of Homecoming 1984, Oct. 15-20, and many events were planned to make Cy's birthday a happy one.

Activities were held all during the week leading up to the Homecoming football game on Saturday.

On Monday, the opening kick-off rally lit up central campus with fireworks. A mass sack lunch and the "Yell Like Hell" semi-finals were held on central campus Tuesday. On Wednesday, a lot of coeds became official at a mass campanilling. Thursday night was Cy's Birthday Bash at Granddaddy's bar.

A full schedule of events was planned for Friday, and students had the day off to enjoy the activities.

From 11-2 p.m. was the Battle of the Bands on central campus. Midwest Express won the musical war and received the chance to play at Granddaddy's.

A pep rally was held after the bands played. Coach Jim Criner wasn't able to attend, so Ed Johnson, football program coordinator, fired up the crowd. The Cyclone football captains also appeared at the rally.

The "Yell Like Hell" finals were held during the rally. The winning skit was "Trivial Pur-Cy," A Trivial Pursuit game of ISU. Delta Delta Delta sorority and Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity performed the skit.

Homecoming '84 saw a small revival of an old tradition when Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity constructed a lawn display. Recently, interest in lawn displays has decreased, and more houses devoted their attention to Homecoming banners. Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity won the large banner division.

All of these activities were organized under the theme of Cy's birthday. Cy first appeared during Homecoming 1954. The pep council that year wanted a symbol of school spirit. A cardinal was chosen as the mascot, and Collegiate Manufacturing Co. designed the original Cy.

The pep council sponsored a contest to name the new mascot. Seventeen people thought up the name "Cy," but the credit goes to Mrs. Ed Ohlson of Ames because she submitted her entry first.

Most birthday celebrations end happily. But Cy's 30th birthday was to end with a football game against Oklahoma. That would be enough to depress most school mascots, but upsets are always possible.

Homecoming Saturday, Oct. 20, had a full slate of activities from pep rallies to barbeques.

Things started off when the Torchathon relay runners arrived in Ames about 2 p.m. The relay began in Norman, Okla., on Tuesday. About 45 students and ten alumni runners made the 660-mile trek.

Once in Ames, runners carried the Homecoming torch through the stadium parking lots to fire up tailgaters.

Later, the annual alumni barbeque and pep rally took place in the Scheman courtyard. The winning "Yell Like Hell" skit was performed by Delta Delta Delta sorority and Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity.

The football game began at 6:45 p.m., an unusual starting time. In fact, it was the first night game ever played in the Cyclone Stadium.

The cable sports network, ESPN, televised the game, which was made possible with temporary stadium lights. They were installed by Musco Sports Lighting Ltd. of Oskaloosa, the same company that lighted the 1984 Summer Olympics.

The pre-game festivities included choruses of "Happy Birthday to You" for Cy while the ISU Cyclone Marching Band formed a huge birthday cake. Also, before the game, the torchathon runners paraded onto Jack Trice Field.

At halftime, the surprising Cyclones led the Sooners, 7-3. During the break, ISU's Olympians, Nawal El Moutawakel, Sunday Uti and Danny Harris were honored.

The band highlighted its performance with the "1812 Overture," complete with cannon fire and smoke.

The second half was a nervous one for Cyclone boosters. Hardy a fan was seated in the stadium.

Eventually the Sooners prevailed, 12-10. The two teams played a great game for the capacity crowd and the 1.5 million viewers on ESPN. The Cyclones could be proud of their effort.

The upset wasn't possible for Cy's 30th birthday, but then there's always a 31st birthday. — David Schuster

It was a sight not soon forgotten. Nearly 15,000 people brought together for one night only, for one reason only. Some had waited in line for hours. Some had spent their entire savings. But when Bruce Springsteen left the stage Nov. 16, most agreed it was worth every second and every cent.

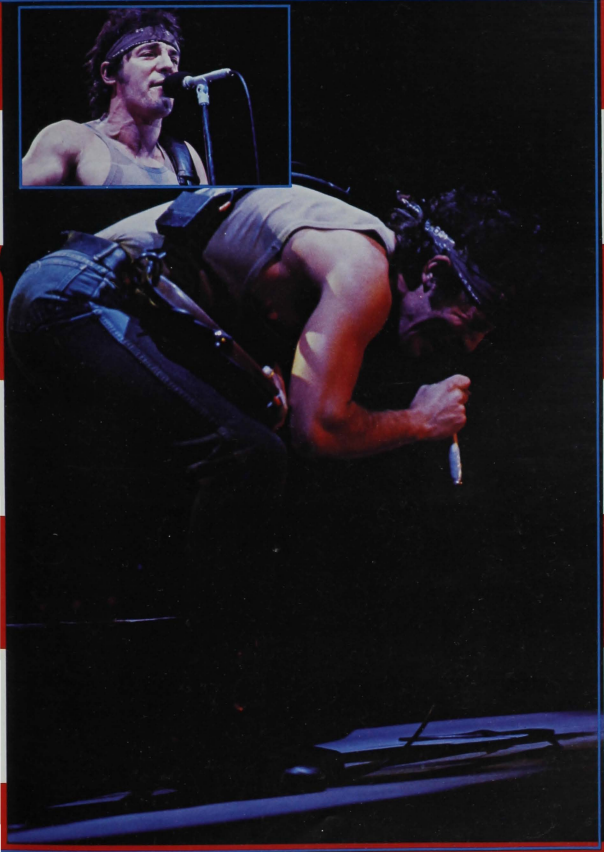

It isn't often one goes to a four-hour rock concert and leaves as exhausted as the performer. It isn't often one sees a four-hour rock concert. But this was different. This was the Boss. This was the best.

Springsteen and the E Street Band started off the four-hour stretch with the title track from their latest release "Born in the U.S.A." and hours later they were going just as strong. The Michael What's-His-Face fever that swept ISU last spring was history.

Of course there were the favorites like "Jungleland," "Hungry Heart," "Thunder Road" and "Cadillac Ranch." But it was the second encore that did the audience in. The house lights went on and Springsteen exploded into the nearly 30-minute set with "Born to Run." He kept the crowd dancing during a medley including "Devil with the Blue Dress," "Good Golly Miss Molly" and "Twist and Shout," and finally wrapped up with "Santa Claus is Coming to Town," complete with Clarence Clemmons dressed somewhat like an over-sized elf.

For those who weren't fans before, they were now. For those who were already Springsteen addicts, they got a rock 'n' roll high they're not likely to experience for a long time. Michael who? — Beth Wilson

Barjche

Cats dancing? That's right. The annual Barjche dance concert lived up to its reputation of presenting an exciting and diverse evening of dance.

The 90-minute concert included ten pieces, ranging from lyric ballet to new wave.

Barjche is the annual project of Orchesis, ISU's modern dance club, and the ISU dance faculty. Barjche got its name from a conglomeration of the names of the club's original officers.

Barjche was highlighted by guest artists Rick Moore and Rose Auslander, a New York couple now based in Des Moines.

In the hilarious "Cat Waltz," Moore danced with his housecat Krishna in a classical ballet "paw" de deux. The dance began with a humorous, pun-filled lecture on the ancient art of cat dancing. Moore included a "stunt cat" for more dangerous leaps and a large cardboard cat for a solo variation.

Also featured was "Sueno Mohino Del Quarto Mundo" (Hidden Dreams of the Fourth World), a dramatic modern dance by guest choreographer and former Orchesis member Vernon Windsor. — Stuart Roy

TWYLA THARP DANCE

THE ISRAEL BALLET

NIKOLAIS DANCE THEATRE

Some of the most articulate feet in the world of dance came to Ames in 1984.

The super-charged performers of the Twyla Tharp dance company lit up the C.Y. Stephens stage on March 31. The program included "Telemann," an energetic modern ballet, "Fugue," danced by three men in street clothes accompanied by their stomping foot noises, and "Sinatra Songs." Danced by couples in tuxedos and Oscar de la Renta dresses, it was spectacularly done to the music of Frank Sinatra.

The devoted young dancers of the Israel Ballet performed on April 28 and 29. International in make-up, the 35 dancers made their first visit since 1981. Founded in 1967, the Israel Ballet is now that country's leading ballet company. The highlight of their performance was a fresh, intense re-creation of George Balanchine's "Serenade."

The Nikolais Dance Theatre presented a distinct world of color and shape on November 9 and 10. Alwin Nikolais' choreography varied from controlled gracefulness in "Noumenon," in which the dancers were encased in colorful stretchy fabric to the whimsical "Video Game," done in flouresent costumes under blacklight. In "Tensile Involvement," the dancers weaved cat's cradle designs around themselves with huge elastic bands.

The genius of Alwin Nikolais never stopped creating, exploring and surprising. — Stuart Roy

Where else can you find a pair of young lovers, talking germs and blood cells, old classmates, video stars, gamblers and dames, ghosts and ghouls, doctors and nurses, and top-notch reporters all in the same room? Where else but Varieties 1984!

Last spring's show marked the 52nd year of Varieties at Iowa State. Sponsored by the Student Union Board, Varieties offers students the opportunity to show off their hidden talents. Whether it be singing, dancing, acting or producing, the students involved put together four nights of superb entertainment.

The 1984 Sweepstakes presented the top three skits and vignettes and a panel of judges narrowed it down to one each. This years winning skit A Change of Heart was performed by Pi Beta Phi and Farm House. The judges chose What Four?, a comical barbershop quartet, as the first place vignette. Dimitri made his debut in the United States in 1974 at the International Mime Festival, where he was the star of the show. He has toured the U.S. on a regular basis every few years since then. The crowd at C.Y. Stephens was glad he had made the trip once again. — Traci Matt

ENGINEERS' WEEK 1984

TOUCHING TECHNOLOGY

"Touching Technology" was an appropriate theme for the 1984 Engineering Week at ISU. The event is one that not only involves all the engineers, but encourages participation by students in all disciplines. 1984 Engineering Week took place at the end of September and was planned and put together by its central committee of 20 engineering students.

Kathy Marvin, central committee member in charge of the awards banquet, said, "The part of E-Week that draws the most students from the entire University is the Industrial Displays." Nearly 48 companies set up promotional displays in the Great Hall of the Memorial Union. "The recruiters and representatives from these companies do some recruiting, but are basically there to promote their company to ISU's engineers which are known to be some of the best in the country."

Other things that took place during E-Week included student displays representing the various organizations and honoraries within the Engineering College.

There was also an E-Week Superstars Competition. Here, representatives from 14 different disciplines of engineering, competed in volleyball and tug-of-war.

Also, students had the opportunity to "Dunk a Professor." A design contest and FAC also drew crowds for the week.

The Awards Banquet was a big success according to Kathy Marvin. "This gives ISU the opportunity to recognize the outstanding seniors in the engineering department plus recognize the big companies that make large contributions to ISU."

Marvin said, "I know people on this campus think all engineers run around with horn-rimmed glasses, short pants, carrying calculators on their belts and six mechanical pencils in their shirt pockets, and have no social life. But it isn't true and E-Week provides the opportunity to get all disciplines of engineering together as well as promoting engineering on the campus. Engineers are normal people too!"

A country road. A tree. Such was the setting for the Feb. 17-26 Iowa State University Theatre production of Samuel Beckett's surrealistic masterpiece, Waiting For Godot.

The play details two days in the lives of a pair of old men who are perpetually waiting for Godot, a mysterious man who never shows up. Instead he sends a messenger boy to tell the men that he will surely come the following evening.

The two men, Vladimir and Estragon, were played by Amy Lee Rooks and Barb Rossmeisl. The women brought a sense of intimacy to the characters without giving up the comic quality of their "Chip and Dale" dialogue exchanges. They performed well off of each other and used the audience effectively.

The two men encountered Pozzo and his servant Lucky twice during the play. Pozzo and Lucky provided plenty of slapstick comic relief and were played by Kevin West and Brad Barnes. Barnes communicated well through his almost mute character with graphic facial expressions and gutteral mumbling. West expanded the circus master character of Pozzo to the limit, performing well off of Lucky's antics.

Joe Jennison played A Boy; an important but small part. Jennison competently embodied the innocence and youth of his character.

The costumes and the set were simple, allowing maximum attention to the characters. From Pozzo's plaid pants and suspenders to the old suits of Vladimir and Estragon, the costumes conveyed much about the character's personalities.

The set was a dingy stage with a simple wire tree that set the mood even before the characters appeared. The subdued lighting and appropriate musical prelude also helped convey the melancholy mood of the play.

Godot was performed in Fisher Theater with limited seating directly on the stage. The proximity of the audience made the play even more intimate and personal. — Sara Faivre

Iowa State University Theatre opened its 1984-85 season with The Dining Room, an off-Broadway play written in 1981 by A. R. Gurney, Jr.

The play was set in a dining room of a typical well-to-do household on the East Coast, where the action was comprised of a collection on non-related scenes that highlighted the changing values of the American Family. At times, the beginning of one scene would overlap the end of another without the actors acknowledging the other scene.

One element of the play made it theatrically unique. A cast of six actors, three men and three women, assumed the roles of 58 characters and displayed a tremendous range of age and emotions. It was fascinating to watch. Each time an actor returned to the stage, he/she was a new character, often quite different from the former.

The action of the play included realistic portrayals of anything that could possibly happen in a dining room, such as a child's birthday party, a boy's return home from boarding school to discover his mother's infidelity, and a senile grandmother who did not recognize her own sons at Thanksgiving dinner.

Subtle yet distinct differences between each character made the acting effective and believable. Slight variations of the basic costumes also aided the quick character transformations.

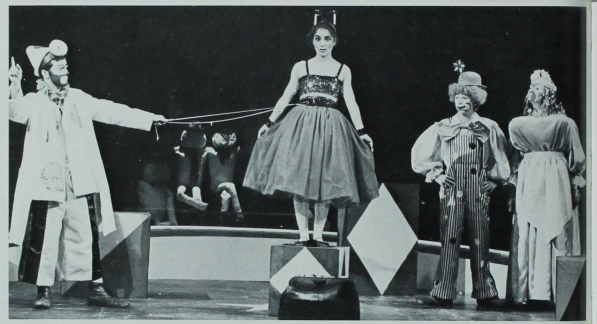

Careful attention to detail in technical aspects of the production led to an overall feeling of warmth and sophistication. Especially nice was the sunlight shining in through the unseen French doors onto the parquet floor. —Stuart Roy

This Doctor is a Clown!

A circus and a play may not seem to have very much in common, but for ISU Theatre's production of Moliere's classic farce, The Doctor In Spite of Himself, they went hand in hand.

Instead of the standard 17th century interpretation of the play, Director Patrick Gouran chose a circus concept because of the clown-like physical comedy inherent in the script.

The plot centered around Martine's revenge against her husband Sganarelle for beating her. Martine (Angela Goreman) told two men that her husband was the best doctor in the land, but would refuse to admit to it unless beaten. Sganarelle (Gary Sullivan), in truth a woodcutter, assumed the role of a doctor to avoid further beatings. What followed was several humorous situations as Sganarelle carried out his impersonation.

Spotlights on towers, balloons and flags on "tent poles" were placed in the audience to make Fisher Theater look more like a circus tent. Music, lighting and costumes all effectively reflected and enhanced the circus atmosphere. —Lisa Amos and Stuart Roy ✧

THE GOOD PERSON

The Maintenance Shop of the Memorial Union was the location for Iowa State University Theatre's production of The Good Person of Setzuan.

Originally written between 1938 and 1949 by German playwright Bertolt Brecht, ISU Theatre produced a special version rewritten by Brecht in 1943 while he was in exile in the U.S. during World War II. In the revision, Brecht shortened the script and made it more understandable for American audiences.

The main theme of the play is that it is impossible to be entirely good without being slightly evil.

The play begins by focusing on Wang (Harold Mullen), the water seller in the destitute, mythical province of Setzuan. He eagerly awaits the arrival of the three gods (Ray Jensen, Linda Renner and Michael Stone) who are searching for any truly good persons left in the world.

They soon meet Shen Teh, the prostitute (Mary Gruber) who, because of circumstances, is found to be the only one worthy of being called virtuous. In her goodness, she cannot refuse to help the less fortunate. To survive she impersonated an imaginary evil male cousin. Her desire to do good is blocked by her need to survive.

Although much of the play was serious, Brecht achieved some fine comic effects in picturing man's pretentions of morality eroded by his instinct for survival. Especially funny were the three gods.

Gruber brought out the many facets of the demanding Shen Teh Shui Ta character. She shifted believably from shrewd businesswoman to woman in love to joyful expectant mother.

The intimate atmosphere of the Maintenance Shop was perfect for this powerful, often overlooked, classic play. —Stuart Roy

TRICE IT YOU'LL LIKE IT!

Above: A banquet was held in honor of Jack Trice. The ISU football field was named to recognize him for his high standards and contributions to football. His cousin Chester accepted the award. — Ames Tribune

Although the football games are usually the main attraction on Saturday afternoons during the fall on Iowa State's campus, however, Nov. 3, 1984, the day of the Iowa State University versus the University of Michigan game, marked a time when "the game" took back seat to a history making event at ISU; the dedication of the football field in the name of Jack Trice.

The slogan "Trice it, you'll like it" was one of many that contributed to the eleven year debate on whether to name the football stadium after Jack Trice or the university's mascot, the Cyclone. The controversy was resolved with a compromise that would satisfy all persons involved. The area was to be called Cyclone Stadium and Jack Trice Field from that day on.

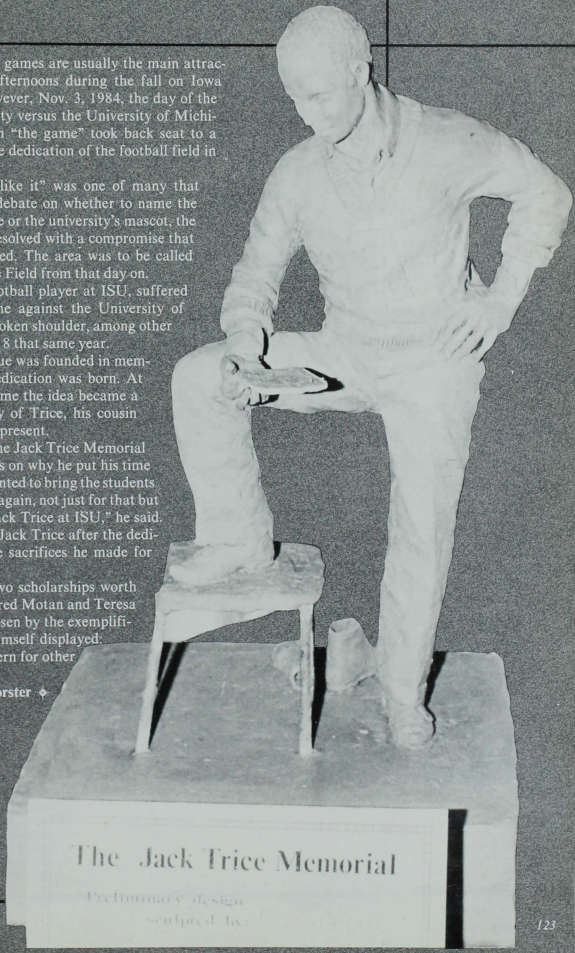

Jack Trice, the first black football player at ISU, suffered injuries acquired during a game against the University of Minnesota on Oct. 5, 1923. A broken shoulder, among other injuries caused his death on Oct. 8 that same year.

Eleven years ago when a plaque was founded in memory of Trice, the idea of the dedication was born. At half-time of the November 3 game the idea became a reality, and official. In memory of Trice, his cousin Chester, and Chester's son were present.

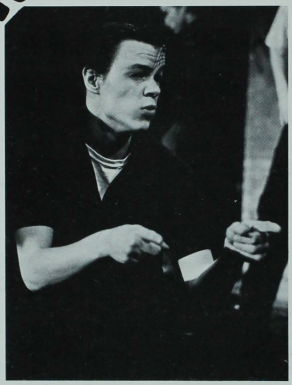

Robert Braudt, President of the Jack Trice Memorial Foundation, relayed his thoughts on why he put his time into a cause such as this. "We wanted to bring the students and the administration together again, not just for that but for the continuing memory of Jack Trice at ISU," he said. "We hoped people won't forget Jack Trice after the dedication ceremony because of the sacrifices he made for ISU that were great."

Along with the dedication, two scholarships worth $600 each were rewarded to Alfred Motan and Teresa Martin. The recipients were chosen by the exemplification of the standards Trice himself displayed: decent GPA, courage, and concern for other human beings.

ISU's budding playwrights displayed their literary talent at the Maintenance Shop Nov. 5-10, 1984.

Student-Authored One-Act Plays are produced by students in English/ Speech Communication 316 (playwrighting). The students progress from single scenes to production of full-length one-act plays.

The first play, Eulogy written by Jay Heydlauff, was melodramatic. It concerned a group of three friends who return home each year to pay tribute to their friend Rick, who was killed in a car accident while playing "chicken" with the other three. Todd (Tim Lana) accused Dave (David Clark) of purposefully killing Rick so he could have Rick's girlfriend Susan (Emily Smith).

The second play, The Haunting of Henry, written by Russell Grant Collins, was an astute skit about a ghost named Kevin (Henry McNair) who comes back to life for a week to haunt his best friend Henry (Darius Jackson). At the same time Kevin shocks his girlfriend Robyn (Lorraine Shipp) who is now seeing Henry.

The Marlboro Men, written by Jim Powers, concerned two college students. In the play John (David Clark) and Frank (Henry Mc Nair) waited in the library reference room for a "raven-haired goddess" who placed an advertisement in the personals of the newspaper. The ad inquired about the "cute redhead" who said hello at registration.

Convinced the "cute redhead" is himself, John is totally shocked when he finds the person looking for the "cute rehead" is actually a guy in search of a female redhead.

The last of the plays, Operation: Fenster, by Kurt Welcken, was a whimsical scene of practical jokers trying to even the score against the master of pranks, their friend Fenster.

In the end, Fenster outwits the pranksters and gets them arrested for their birthday mischief. — Angie Banowetz ✦

ANYTHING WE DREAM CAN COME TRUE

Right: Would-be actress Angel (Lori Bunnell) sings of how someday she will be somebody. When Angel falls in love with Orphan, they are able to convince Mr. Rich (Bob Hanson) that life has meaning and beauty. — Brian Palmer

The musical Celebration was performed at an appropriate time for Ames' residents suffering from bone-chilling cold and more than their share of snow. Sponsored by the Student Union Board, Celebration was part of the Memorial Union's WINTERGARDEN Week, Feb. 1-4, 1984.

The musical was a 'celebration' of the seasons and the cycle of life. It related the symbolic tale of youth portrayed in the character of Orphan (Scott Hegenbart), and age, portrayed in the guise of Mr. Rich (Bob Hanson).

The plot begins with Rich buying the orphanage where Orphan lives. Rich plans to demolish the orphanage and Orphan's garden along with it.

Other characters adding life to the play are Potemkin (Christine Powers) and Angel (Lori Bunnell).

Potemkin attempts to show the thoroughly snobbish yet hilarious Mr. Rich that there really is good in life.

Angel is a reflection of Mr. Rich's first love. She attempts to show Rich the importance of love and warmth.

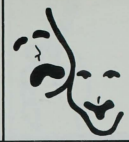

Orphan, meanwhile, tries to teach the old man about faith in God and the rebirth that comes with spring.

The Ten Revelers (Maureen Horan, Angie Memos, Doris Nash, Steven Arrasmith, Lori Budde, Jim Cavaloli, Bob Thomas, Susan Thompson, Carrel Watson and Greg Wiley), played a group of chorus members who danced and performed around the stage in costumes and bizarre masks.

"Anything we dream . . . can come true," and this perhaps gave the audience a vision of spring waiting just around the corner. — Angie Banowetz ✦

CAN WE TALK?

*Left: Hamlow justifies aesthetically and philosophically the fine art of baton twirling. She and her best friend have created a religion centered around twirling which includes twirling batons set with razor blades. — Michael Doolen

A collaborative effort of Union Board Theatre and the Ames Women's Theatre resulted in the production of Talking With, a play by Jane Martin.

The play consisted of 11 solo performance pieces that dealt with how women have been conditioned to cope with a male-dominated society. The pieces, all performed by women, brought together a colorful array of unusual and often neurotic characters.

Often intense and bitterly funny, Talking With included scenes such as Kate Hickok portraying an insecure actress, Marguerite Sibley as a woman whose mother has just died, Helen Herrnstadt as an old woman who talked of McDonald's as the true symbol of American life, Teresa Albertson as an actress threatening to pulverize her cat unless she gets her desired role, Ann Philips as a once-religious snake handler and Kelli Hamlow as a fanatic baton twirler. — Stuart Roy ✦

MURDER!

*Left: Kevin Dutcher (standing) tries to convince Greg Wiley to play a game. The game, however, soon becomes reality. Sleuth was performed as a dinner theatre in the Campanile Room of the Memorial Union. — Klaus Kocher

The question in the Union Board Theatre's production of the play Sleuth wasn't the typical "Who dunnit?" but rather "Did he really do it?"

The plot unfolds with Kevin Dutcher portraying a famous mystery writer who invites his wife's lover over for a "visit." Dutcher claims he doesn't mind their having an affair; he just wants to be sure his soon-to-be ex-wife will be well taken care of.

Dutcher's character, who is obsessed with playing games, especially games which could provide a possible plot for one of his books, convinces Wiley's character to help him in a "game" by staging a robbery of Dutcher's mansion. During the game, Wiley gets shot. The act concludes as the audience is led to believe Wiley is dead.

The second act begins with Wiley now portraying several different characters, including the policeman investigating Wiley's "murder." The audiences realizes Wiley isn't dead. Meanwhile, Wiley, alerted to the possible danger he is in, phones the police. Soon after, however, Dutcher kills him. As Wiley dies, he warns his assailant that the police are on their way. The play ends as the audience hears a knock on the door. Is it the police? — Stuart Roy ✦

The familiar and easygoing atmosphere of the Maintenance Shop was transformed into the delightfully bawdy Kit Kat Klub in Cabaret, a Union Board Theatre production.

Cabaret began with American writer Clifford Bradshaw's (Dean Schmitt) arrival in Berlin not long before the Nazi party began to take control.

During Cliff's journey to Berlin, he met Ernst Ludwig (Erich Epp) who told him of a kind old woman with rooms for rent and of a wonderful little cabaret, the hottest spot in the heart of decadent Berlin.

After renting a room from Fraulein Schneider (Sheila Lounsberry) Cliff decided to check out the Kit Kat Klub, where he soon met its featured performer from England, the impetuous and provacative Sally Bowles (Stephanie Davis).

Sally immediately talked her way into moving in with Cliff, and the two quickly discovered their love. Sally became pregnant and the two began making plans for the start of their life together, including Cliff's searching for a job. He could no longer make enough money by teaching English lessons while working on his novel.

Across the hall, Fraulein Schneider was courted by Herr Schultz, (Mike Purcell) a loveable old man who owned a small fruit shop. He often brought Schneider gifts of fruit, which was rare and expensive during the economic struggle of the day. Schultz won Schneider's heart and the two decided to marry. Schultz was truly overwhelmed with happiness.

It was soon evident the Nazi party was gaining power, and the situation in Berlin growing steadily worse. Fraulein Schneider feared for her future because the man she loved was a Jew. She regretfully returned her engagement gifts and announced the wedding was off.

Cliff decided it was time to return to America to escape the approaching tragic circumstances. He wanted Sally to pack, but she said she wanted to stay. She preferred the safety of her unrealistic life as a cabaret singer. While rehearsing one of her numbers, and after fighting with Cliff, she remembered the philosophy of her dear friend Elsie, and sang the familiar song "Cabaret." At this moment she decided she could not leave. She then got an abortion that she paid for with her most prized possession — her new fur coat.

The time came for Cliff to leave, and the two shared a touching moment as they said good-bye.

The play ended with Cliff verbalizing his memories of Berlin, and of Sally. We again saw the Master of Ceremonies (Sam Potter) and the cabaret girls (Brenda Bedard, Kate Hickok, Linda Renner, and Tammy Stull) but this time they were even more enticing yet revolting than before. The disease of Nazism continued to spread, made palatable by the facade of the cabaret.

The staging of Cabaret in the Maintenance Shop Bar was especially appropriate. During scenes that took place in the Kit Kat Klub, cast members mingled with the actual audience. The Master of Ceremonies and the four cabaret girls also ventured into the audience and flirted with the guests. The intimacy of the theatre heightened both the hilarious comedic moments and the intense dramatic moments. — Stuart Roy ✦

PHI PSI 500

Right: Since the Phi Psi 500 plan saw rain, this guy decided a pair of sunglasses and a beer would make things more exciting. Below: And the race is on. These two Phi Psi 500 participants are trying to be the first ones to carry their raw egg to the pan on the table — without breaking the egg.

The fourth annual Phi Psi 500 was held on Saturday, Oct. 6, and although the day was rainy, it was a success. All who participated had a great time.

The nine sororities who took part in the Phi Psi 500 olympics included: Alpha Gamma Delta, Alpha Xi Delta, Chi Omega, Delta Delta Delta, Gamma Phi Beta, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Kappa Alpha Theta, and Pi Beta Phi.

These sororities composed the 24 teams (some sororities had more than one team) that competed in the Olympic events.

In the first part of the event, the first girl had to run, carrying an egg on a spoon, to a cone and then return. The next girls had to pound two nails into a piece of wood. Next, another girl threw two softballs through a tire. Once this was completed, someone else had to bob for an apple and then throw three water balloons to the next girl who then sat on one of them. Finally, the last participant drove a wheelchair through an obstacle course to the finish line.

The winner of this grueling event was Delta Delta Delta. They received $200 for their prize and they used the money for an FAC with the Phi Psi's.

Second place went to Gamma Phi Beta and third to Kappa Kappa Gamma. The Tunes played at the victory party that night which drew a surprisingly large crowd for such a rainy night.

The Phi Psi 500 is a national event which over 70 Phi Kappa Psi chapters participate in each year. Many of the chapters have their own unique way of holding the fundraiser.

The Phi Psi 500 started at Cornell University in 1969. On this campus, the 500 is an all-campus race with up to 1200 runners participating in it.

The runners start at the Phi Psi house and then run to a bar and have a drink. Then they run to another bar and another and another and another until finally they end up back at the Phi Psi house. The race is very successful, usually drawing a crowd of about 10,000 spectators and raising about $14,000.

At Penn State, the Phi Psi 500 is a huge bike race which the movie "Breaking Away" was based on.

In the last 12 years, Penn State has raised over $50,000 annually holding this race. — Kathy Egan

at the union

When it's cold, snowing and you've got an hour or two to kill before you go to your next class, what better thing to do than stop by the Memorial Union and see what's going on for Wintergarden '85. A $1500 budget just to provide Iowa State University students with a fun way to break the mid-February doldrums is twice as much as was given five years ago when Wintergarden was started.

So what have the Union Board Theater, the Maintenance Shop, Union Workspace and the Cafeteria, all co-sponsors of the week-long event, provided for our entertainment purposes? A dandy was certainly the Couch Potato Contest. Of course there was the usual big demand for the seats in the Memorial Union's T.V. room during soap operas, but during Wintergarden, students stayed as long as their schedules allowed. Why? Because anyone who watched the TV for over ten hours won the prize — a TV dinner. Not something we would all skip classes for, but some did.

Also, some great 'awful' movies were shown. And it didn't even cost anything to get in. But these movies were SOOOO bad . . . How bad were they? They were so bad that students had to pay to leave the movie. The longer they suffered through the movie, the less expensive it was to leave. These awful movies included "Gus," "I was a Teenage Werewolf," "Batman and Plan 9 from Outer Space." Now that's bad.

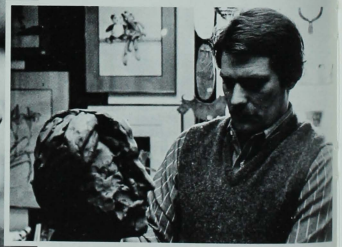

But the Memorial Union wasn't just interested in promoting television-watching and bad-movie viewing. Cabaret was presented by the Union Board Theatre. The performances were all sold out and the producers got many calls from people who couldn't get tickets. People hoped another production could be added, but it was too late to have the Maintenance Shop for that extra day. Those who did get to see it were in for an entertaining evening. Culture was also encouraged at the wine tasting in the Browsing Library. Connoisseurs of fine wine, and even people who don't care if their wine is generic, showed up to see what it is that usually goes on in California and France, but seldomly in Iowa.

Other artistic events included a piano, violin and cello ensemble from the University of Iowa, a sculptor who did a workshop, a mural painting plus two evenings of Varieties performances. If this wasn't enough to warm up anyone's winter blues, I don't know what would be. — Jean M. Otteson ✧

It's Saturday night — Nov. 3, 1984. At 9:00 p.m. (but does anyone really know what time it is?) the stadium lights shut off. Gregarious, enthusiastic fans were demanding a show. Suddenly, with a flood of light, the spotlights illuminated the familiar Chicago logo as Chicago stepped on stage for another performance at ISU before a near sell out crowd of appreciative fans, both past and present. Dressed in white, the members of the band provided a multifaceted display as the many colored lights flashed continously in every range of the visible spectrum.

Chicago began their concert with a song off their new album Chicago 17 — "We Can Stop the Hurtin'." The crowd began clapping and cheering when the piano began playing "Colour My World" and seemed enthralled as the concert continued with hits like "Saturday in the Park," "If You Leave Me Now," "Along Comes a Woman," "Stay the Night," and the hit list continues.

Chicago's characteristic musical sound, that of the trombone, alto sax, and trumpet, not only makes their music easy to identify, but also seems to set their music apart from other bands. From the looks of the crowd at Hilton Coliseum Saturday night, it would seem that the love affair with Chicago will continue to be a "hard habit to break."

SIMON REMEMBERS BRIGHTON BEACH

Neil Simon's latest Broadway hit, Brighton Beach Memoirs, made a stop at C.Y. Stephens Auditorium on Nov. 26.

Like many of Simon's plays, Brighton Beach Memoirs draws from the playwright's life. Simon recalls moments of his family life and adolescence during the 1930s with heartwarming compassion. The result is subtly serious yet entertaining comedy.

The central character of the play was 15-year-old Eugene Morris Jerome, who lived in a crowded and troubled household in the Brighton Beach district of Brooklyn. Eugene acted as narrator of, as well as the central participant in, the events of the play. Through verbalized entries in his journal, the audience learned about Eugene's greatest dream: to play for the New York Yankees, to become a writer, and to finally get at least 2½ second glimpse of a naked girl.

Though Eugene dearly loved his family, he announced the members of the household like a list of coming attractions he would choose not to see. His mother was an obsessive homemaker, his father a fatigued worker trying to survive the Depression, and his brother was torn between doing what he knew was right and facing reality.

Other soap operatic calamities occurred in Eugene's extended family, thanks to a widowed aunt, her restless older daughter and her sickly younger one.

In Brighton Beach Memoirs, Simon's sense of humor took the sting out of life's common miseries. Eugene met the pleasures and pains of growing up with a light heart in this touching play. —Stuart Roy ✣

SYNTHESIZED SHOCK

He promised the audience "We gonna groove tonight" and groove they did. Herbie Hancock came to Ames Sept. 17, along with synthesizers, rotating heads and torso-less pairs of legs, for a night of the unusual.

"Earthbeat," the opening song, set the pace for the two-hour, synthesizer-filled concert. Hancock played several songs from his latest album, Future Shock, including "Rocket," winner of five MTV Video Music Awards.

Hancock's loud, dynamic performance relied on a mixture of electronic instruments and traditional African instruments. Foday Musa Suso of Gambia, the band's newest member, introduced the audience to the kora, an ancient guitar-like instrument. D. St., another band member, demonstrated something called "scratchin'." St. first got the audience's attention by screaming chants and having the crowd yell back. He then hopped up on to a platform of turntables and began "scratching" them, producing strange noises. Meanwhile, three pairs of white pants and black shoes danced high above the stage. Down below, a blonde-wigged mannequin with one moving arm sat next to a male mannequin sprawled in a chair with its head moving back and forth to the music.

While this was an instrument-oriented concert, three songs were sung: "Future Shock," "Stars in Your Eyes," and "Karabali."

Hancock's performance, overall, was energetic, highly innovative and LOUD! It was quite a change for one of the world's foremost jazz pianists. —Monica McGregor

La Boheme, Giacomo Puccini's melodically beautiful opera once again delighted opera fans and friends at C.Y. Stephens Auditorium. Young artists from the New York City Opera, headed by former opera star Beverly Sills, brought to life portraits of artists of the Latin Quarter of Paris from the 1830s.

La Boheme opens in a sparsely furnished attic studio in Paris. Rudolpho, the poet, and his roommate Marcello, a painter, comment on the bitter cold of the studio. In spite of the chill, the music is vivacious and the mood lighthearted. Kindling for a fire and food for a party are brought by Schaunerd, a musician, who amuses his studio mates by explaining that he was able to secure his goodies by singing a rich man's parrot to death for money. He convinces the men further revelry awaits them outside and all but Rudolpho, who claims he must remain and work on a story, leave the studio burlesquing a "grand opera" exit.

In the quiet studio, Rudolpho lights a candle and attempts to write. At this moment, Boheme's heroine, Mimi, makes her entrance. The future lovers meet when Rudolpho, who hears her calling for help after her candle has been blown out, and is exhausted from climbing the steps to her apartment. As they introduce themselves, two of the opera's greatest arias are heard.

The scene changes to the Cafe Momus. It is Christmas Eve and the square is crowded with people in a festive mood. Musetta, a fiery and beautiful resident of the Latin Quarter is introduced. Although she is in love with Marcello, she has a wealthy and aging admirer named Alcindoro who adoringly follows after her. When Marcello pretends indifference to her, she sings an aria telling everyone how no one can resist her.

Musetta and Marcello are unable to resist each other. Musetta manages to get rid of Alcindoro and the two lovers rush into each other's arms. Drum beats sound in the distance as an excited crowd gathers in the square. The crowd joins the marchers in a stirring chorus and the revelers exit merrily.

The next scene moves to the gates of Paris. Snowflakes fall gently to the accompaniment of harp music. Mimi, who is now racked by her ever-persistent cough, is invited to a nearby inn by Marcello, but he refuses to go in because Rudolpho is there. Torn apart by his jealously, the two are no longer lovers. Although he pretends he no longer loves her, Rudolpho finally admits Mimi is dearer to him than anything else.

There are complications. Mimi is seriously ill and he fears she is doomed. As Rudolpho tells Marcello his fears about Mimi and that not even his love can save her, Mimi approaches and overhears. Sobbing, she is heard by Rudolpho, who takes her in his arms. Softly bidding him goodbye, Mimi tells Rudolpho she must leave him. Against the anguished duet of Mimi and Rudolpho, Musetta and Marcello are heard once again engaged in fiery battle as Marcello accuses Musetta of infidelity.

We return to the attic scene. Musetta and Marcello are now split. Rudolpho also grieves for Mimi.

Mimi is dying and has implored Musetta to take her to Rudolpho. She is without food or medicine. A sympathetic Colline takes off his coat and sings one of the opera's most hauntingly beautiful arias in which he bids farewell to a coat that has served him well. He leaves to sell the coat to buy food for Mimi.

The friends are unable to save Mimi, who is overcome by her coughing. Musetta gives Mimi her muff to warm her hands and then Mimi and Rudolpho are left to sing their impassioned farewells to each other. The opera ends with thundering chords as an agonized Rudolpho cries Mimi's name over her lifeless body, still holding her in his arms.

The role of Mimi was sung by Young Mi Kim, a young Korean artist whose pure soprano voice perfectly suited the sensitive, fragile personality of the doomed seamstress. Sandra Ruggles, as Musetta, delighted the audience with her vivacious performance. Rudolpho was sung by Michael Sylvester, a familiar name with Ames audiences.

It may have been a cold, snowy night in Ames, but those in attendance for La Boheme didn't care. Beverly Sills' New York City Opera had once again proved that it can hold its own with other major companies. —Lou Christensen

Alleluia is a song of praise and joy. It was also the theme for the 29th Annual Christmas Festival presented by the Iowa State University Department of Music on Dec. 8-9.

Besides being an enjoyable holiday music concert, the festival was a chance to see the many ensembles together at one time. The concert was also an opportunity for the students in the ensembles to see what the other groups were doing. Close to 350 persons participated in the concert.

As the audiences entered C.Y. Stephens Auditorium, they were greeted with familiar carols performed by the ISU Brass Ensemble. Eight other groups were involved in the concert, including University Chorus, Oratorio Chorus, Men's Glee Club, Chamber Singers, Cardinal Keynotes, Iowa State Singers, Double Reed Ensemble, and the ISU Symphony Orchestra. Several of the selections were performed by combinations of the ensembles, most often a collaboration of the ISU Symphony and the combined choirs.

In addition to the popular audience sing-along of traditional carols, the concert was comprised mainly of works by German composers, with several tunes based on Lutheran hymns.

Some of the composers featured in the concert were Britten, Hassler, Handel, Brahms, Respighi, Pinkham and Distler. The final work of the concert was "Alleluia," performed in memory of composer Randall Thompson who died this past summer. —Stuart Roy

The Nutcracker Ballet

The favorite Christmas tradition came once again to Ames on Dec. 14-16. Dancers from all over Iowa took part in the Iowa State Center's fourth annual production of The Nutcracker.

This romantic fantasy came to life when Clara's Christmas gift, a toy nutcracker, magically transforms into a handsome prince. After saving him from the Mouse King and his army, Clara joins the prince on a journey to the Land of Sweets. Upon arrival, a colorful and exiting festival is given in their honor. After the Sugar Plum Fairy and the other beautiful dancers entertain Clara and her prince, they return home. The next scene shows a sleeping Clara being carried off to bed by her parents. It has all been a dream . . . or has it?

The audience was enchanted by the colorful costumes, the beautiful dancing, and the superb performances by all of the dancers.

RESIDENCE HALLS SPECIAL MEALS

To keep the spice in the lives of students, the food service meals are occasionally prepared to celebrate a holiday or feature a country's traditional meal.

Valentine's Day, Easter, Thanksgiving, Halloween and Christmas all have a "special dinner." For the Halloween dinner this year, students came to the cafeteria dressed in costumes. There was a panel of judges who judged them and awarded a prize to the person wearing the best outfit.

Traditional Mexican, Greek and Oriental meals are also served. There are a lot of ISU students who aren't American and food service wants to make them feel just as at home as those who are. Besides, a little culture never hurt anyone.

The special dinners keep things exciting in the residence halls. Also, if you can't go home for Thanksgiving, you still have the opportunity for dining on turkey and dressing. The most popular of the special dinners is the Christmas' White Breakfast.

In keeping with a food service tradition begun in 1918, the White Breakfast was once again presented as a special food service meal.

The breakfast itself began in Lyon Hall, an all girl dormitory at that time with the women, wearing all white and carrying candles as they entered the dining room singing Christmas carols.

"The meal itself is not the important aspect of the breakfast," said Carol Tattison, assistant manager of Friley Food Service. "It's a nice break from the usual breakfast and gives the students an excuse for getting dressed up."

This year's White Breakfast was held on Sunday, Dec. 2, and was considered a great success by Tattison. A large number of students participated in the breakfast and some floors even attended as a group.

Many students who missed the meal expressed regret and vowed to attend next year's meal, Tattison said.

In planning the meal, Friley Food Service expected about 700 students. This marked a substantial increase in weekend attendance for a food service breakfast.

Planning for the meal begins a year in advance when all food service managers get together to plan out the menu for the breakfast, Tattison said. One item on the menu is olives. This is a yearly item since it was served at the very first White Breakfast. In those days olives were considered a delicacy for special occasions only, Tattison said.

Because of the size of the menu, some of the items are prepared the night before the meal. Student employees are also asked to come in the night before and decorate for the breakfast.

The dining room is set up in a buffet style so as to set the meal apart from normal food service meals as much as possible. Student employees working that morning are also asked to dress up.

Additional students were working as coffee servers, waiters, and waitresses, trying to give the atmosphere of dining out, Tattison said.

Other popular items on the menu were the fine Danishes and the "all you can drink" orange juice. All in all, this year's White Breakfast was a huge success Tattison remarked. Plans are in the works for making next year's breakfast an even greater one. — Russ Roberts and Jean M. Otteson do they know it's CHRISTMAS?

While famous rock stars were together for the recording of Do They Know It's Christmas? as "Band Aid", in an attempt to raise money for the people starving in Ethiopia, the Iowa State Singers were singing Christmas carols on the steps of Beardshear Hall in honor of the central campus tree lighting.

"It seems like it's on the coldest day, but there was a faithful following this year. Several hundred people showed up for the tree lighting," said Jefferey Tilden, coordinator of the event. Besides throwing the switch that lit the lights on the tree, events included a recital of Christmas music by Richard von Grabow on the Stanton Memorial Carillon, speakers Paul Kieffer, who was representing the ISU student chapter of the Associated General Contractors of America, and ISU president, W. Robert Parks who was introduced by Mike Reilly, president of G. S. B.

Following the ceremony, President Parks' home tree was lit. Also, the Farm House museum was open for an old fashioned tree trimming. At the "Deck the Halls" reception, visitors helped decorate the tree with old-fashioned ornaments, toured the house, had refreshments and socialized. The lights on the central campus tree were put on by the members of the student chapter of the Associated General Contractors of America. The hydraulic crane needed was donated by Dave Dickenson. "Without his help it probably wouldn't have been possible," said Kieffer.

Noted performers including Bono from U2, Kenny Rogers, Sting from the Police, David Bowie, Bananarama, Duran Duran, Wham, Boy George from Culture Club and Phil Collins, got together for a weekend and recorded "Do They Know It's Christmas" in tribute to the millions of people starving in Ethiopia. They recorded a video that was popular on MTV. The profits from the hit single were donated to feed the Ethiopians. After all, Christmas is all about love, peace and helping each other.

KALEIDOQUIZ

TRIVIA, BUT NOT TRIVIAL

It started off as an occasional call-in, with jokes about coming in last place, but as the night wore on, high-speed races to Boone, Iowa emphasized the seriousness some floors were placing on the KQ contest.

Ed Szynalski, member of Bergman House in B-W-R, said that while racing to Boone for a traveling question, he saw several cars almost collide and one car that had rolled into a ditch. "They said we only had a half hour to answer the question when they really meant an hour and a half," Szynalski said.

After staying up the full 26 hours, Szynalski said it was worth all the time and effort he put into it. "Some say it's crazy, but I had a great time."

"Kaleidoquiz began in 1968 and has been the largest annual trivia game held for students in the residence halls.

The KQ contest allows student teams to call in answers to trivia questions asked by KUSR — ISU's student-run radio stadion. If answered correctly within the six minute limit, the team is awarded specific points, depending upon the difficulty of the question.

This year the 26-hour contest yielded no single winner, but a tie. Niles-Sims tied with Friant-Bennett, but within ten seconds Friant-Bennett had broken the tie by answering the question, "Which college did Bill Smith, KUSR's advisor and coordinator of Residence Life for ISU's Department of Residence work at before coming to Iowa State?"

Friant-Bennett was able to call in Kutztown State University in Pennsylvania within ten seconds.

Dean Wuestenberg, general manager of KUSR said that things went smoothly even in light of the tie-breaker. There really wasn't any contesting questions, everything went smoothly and the tie-breaker worked out great.

Seventy-two teams signed up to participate in KQ this year and 68 made it to the end of the contest. This was also the first year that fraternity-sorority teams could enter, but only two greek houses took part. — Julia Ellwanger

Organizations

Organizing yourself is an important part of collegiate life. From day one, students are taught that organization leads to success. By being organized, you can accomplish what often appears to be an impossible feat. Organized groups are the first step in this process.

Organizations make it possible to unite seemingly different people together whether it be for an event, to share hobbies and interests, or work together to attain a future career goal.

There is something for everyone at ISU. Organizational clubs range from Civil Engineering and Accounting groups to those that gather friends together to share old memories. All you have to do is be organized and look for your particular place on campus. Organizations give you something to anticipate through the course of a year . . . ✦

Pi Sigma Epsilon Wins Top Marketing Research Project Award

Pi Sigma Epsilon, a national marketing and sales fraternity, is only a year old, yet was the winner of a very prestigious award.

PSE, which also stands for Prospective Sales Executives, was chartered in April 1983. It has approximately 50 members who are involved in projects that include fundraising, promotions, and helping nearby communities.

In August 1983, the group began a project as consultants for the Story City Merchants Association and the surrounding areas. PSE members were involved in the project that was led by Susan Gorey, a senior in marketing and Dan Livingston, another senior in marketing. Under their leadership, the group studied various shopping patterns in the Story City area. Members developed questions, conducted random telephone interviews and then tabulated the results. Some of the PSE's recommendations, as a result of the survey, have already been successfully implemented by the Story City and surrounding small towns.

This research project, completed in November 1983, was submitted in March 1984 to be judged at the National Convention of 96 PSE groups in Forth Worth, Tex. The project was evaluated by a National Awards Committee made up of top corporation executives. The Ames chapter was selected as one of the three top finalists. The committee interviewed Livingston and Cassie Anderson, juniors in marketing. The interviews were the final step in the selection of the Ames chapter as the top research project for the 1983-84 academic year. This award was a real honor for the new chapter that was up against many more experienced chapters in the competition.

Gorey said the earnings from the projects the group did were used to finance the trip to the national convention. —Monica McGregor

R-31 Produces Creative Shows

Winning awards seems to be a favorite pastime of Iowa State University students involved in telecommunicative arts. For the third consecutive year an ISU graduate was named the Grand Prize Winner in a national contest for college students sponsored by Alpha Epsilon Rho, the National Broadcasting Society. Awards were given April 7, 1984 at the Alpha Epsilon Rho Annual Convention.

Scott Ginger, a December 1983 graduate from ISU, was selected as the Grand Prize Winner for "First Date," a video he wrote, produced and directed. It was entered in the Video Entertainment-Comedy category.

"First Date" was originally produced for regular broadcast on the ISU student operated cable station R-31.

It was one show in an ongoing series on R-31 known as "Conversations." The program was a comedy showing the different perspectives that a guy and a girl had about their first date with each other. The guy had a terrific time, but unfortunately, the girl wasn't quite as pleased. The performers were Denise Fleissner of Peoria, IL and Jim Twetten of Ames.

"The Hiker," written, produced, and directed by Thomas A. Sawyer of Des Moines, received Honorable Mention in the Video Information-Commercial, Promo or PSA category. Sawyer is also a December graduate from ISU.

Doug Ashby of Boone performed in "The Hiker" which was produced to promote R-31.

Accounting Club

The ISU Accounting Club, with a membership of over one-hundred accounting students, was involved in many activities each year. In the spring of 1984 the Club sold value checks to raise money for the fall field trip. The trip to Oklahoma City in October was a great learning experience for everyone involved.

The Accounting Club also participated in the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance program in the spring. The program provides assistance to the low income and elderly in preparing their income tax returns. Every year the club also has numerous guest speakers from industries and accounting firms.

Members of the Agriculture Education Club are provided with opportunities in leadership and fellowship. These opportunities allow for professional development in the Ag. Ed. curriculum. Becoming a member of the club also means becoming a member of the IVATA and the NVATA, the state and national professional organizations for vocational agriculture teachers. Being service oriented is a goal of the ISU Ag. Ed. Club. Promotion of curriculum development for incoming students, promoting ISU at the National FFA convention and service projects are a few things which tie the club together, making it a professional learning experience.

The Agriculture Mechanization Club is a valuable asset to each of its members. Meetings are held every two weeks during the school year to discuss club business as well as to promote fellowship and leadership among members.

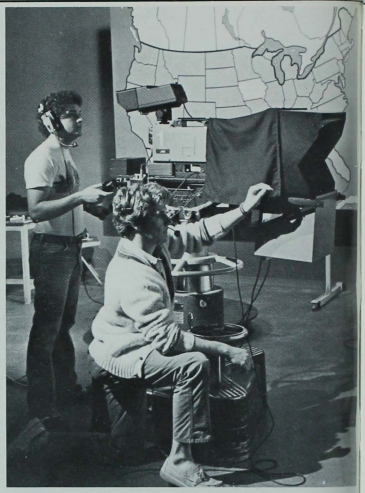

Activities include an annual Ag. Mech.-Ag. Education skills contest, VEISHEA displays and entertainment, lawn mower service day is held as a fund-raiser, and pizza parties are held at the end of each semester. Members are also involved in the American Society of Agriculture Engineers. ✧

Alpha Epsilon Rho

Alpha Epsilon Rho is the ISU chapter of the National Broadcasting Society. In 1984, they hosted, for the second year in a row, the regional convention for other chapters in the surrounding states. In 1984, the chapter sent a delegation to the national convention in Los Angeles and in 1985 they'll go to Nashville.

Locally, the chapter has an audio and video production division which produces tapes for outside organizations. AERho's largest project is managing the ISU cable station R-31. In 1984, they moved their cablecast to Tuesday evenings. This student managed and operated station has a weekly news show and several other award-winning productions.

As the Industrial Engineering honor society, Alpha Pi Mu serves to confer recognition upon I.E. students who have shown exceptional academic abilities and interests. The 55 members strive to increase student-faculty communication, career awareness, and student participation.

Alpha Pi Mu brings students with similar interests and goals together in a social as well as academic setting. Peer advisors form Alpha Pi Mu counsel freshmen and sophomores on the I.E. curriculum and program planning. A bi-semester pizza party and volleyball game serve as recreational diversions for the members.

Alpha Zeta

Alpha Zeta is a professional and service fraternity for students who are interested in agriculture and have demonstrated qualities of leadership, scholarship and character. Interviews for new pledges are held during the fall and spring semesters of each year.

Alpha Zeta held an Agriculture Day for a group of elementary school children. The children and their teachers were brought to ISU, shown a film, and then participated in live demonstrations. Members of AZ planned the program which featured corn, soybeans, legume and grass forages, beef, dairy, swine, sheep and soil. It was a successful venture enjoyed by both the AZ members and the children.

Other aspects of AZ are meetings, speakers, pledge week, fundraising projects and other service projects. An exciting event for 1984 was the opportunity to plan and host the Grainbelt Regional Conclave in November.

American Society of Civil Engineers

The American Society of Civil Engineers, Iowa State University chapter, has a 100-plus membership of civil and pre-civil engineering majors. Bi-weekly meetings are held, consisting of a short business meeting followed by a speaker on civil engineering topics of interest to the students. Other activities include pizza parties, concrete canoe races at Kansas State, and the midwest regional conference of ASCE student chapters held each spring. ◆

The American Society of Interior Designers is the world's largest association of professional interior designers. The purpose of ISU's chapter of ASID is to keep the lines of communication between the professionals and students open. The latest product information, job opportunities, and education workshop information is passed to the student members from the professionals. Students can actively participate at professional functions, thus gaining a different perspective of interior design and gain valuable employment contacts.

ISU's chapter is also very active at the student level. Each year ASID takes part in VEISHEA. The group has won several first place awards for their VEISHEA displays.

The chapter also offers opportunity for travel. Each year ASID takes many field trips. This past year the group spent a week in Dallas, Tex., and weekends in Kansas City, Minneapolis, Omaha, and Chicago.

Membership is open to all interior design students.

Anchor & Chain

The Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps at ISU is a group of midshipmen whose purpose is to excel in leadership and learning. Their goal is to be commissioned a Naval or Marine Corps Officer. To help train them for jobs in the fleet, NROTC provides hands-on training in leadership and personnel management and offers excellent experience through summer cruises with the Navy. Midshipmen also grow through NROTC activities such as Rifle and Pistol teams, color guard, drill team, publications staff, a Toys-for-Tots drive and sailing instruction.

Beacons

Beacons is a service organization for sophomore students who live in the residence halls. Members of the group are chosen from applicants who are outstanding in scholarship and activities during their freshman year. The Beacons strive to develop a spirit of unity and cooperation within the group through service to the residence halls and the University.

Campus Chest

Campus Chest is Ames and ISU working together to benefit from one another. Campus Chest started in 1953, and its purpose is to promote and administer the solicitation of money each school year from the entire student body of ISU in a consolidated effort.

This year's theme for Campus Chest Week was "Reach Out & Touch." During Campus Chest Week, Oct. 29-31 and Nov. 1-2, the organization held a variety of fund-raisers. One was a plant and candy sale, which featured plants, candy, cookies, flowers and pumpkins provided by area businesses.

Campus Chest is completely a volunteer program which involves 110 individuals who contribute their time and energy. Proceeds raised through Campus Chest events were divided equally among seven Ames-area charities including their Youth and Shelter Services and the Ames Visiting Nurses Program. ✧

ISU Couriers

ISU Couriers is an independent service honorary dedicated to promoting residence hall living and service to both ISU and the Ames community.

Couriers work closely with the Admissions office, helping-out with campus tours and the Stay-a-Day program for high school seniors. Other projects Couriers have been involved with are meals on wheels, nursing home visits on Halloween, kite flying with the Boys Club, answering phones for KQ and collecting food for the needy.

Being a member of ISU Couriers gives students the opportunity to meet and interact with students for both the residence halls and off-campus students. It is a changing, growing organization with enthusiastic, motivated students.

Dairy Science Club

The Dairy Science Club provides opportunities for students interested in the dairy industry to promote the club in Iowa and at ISU. By joining, students become part of a close-knit family and are encouraged to develop their leadership abilities. Through participation in educational, social and recreational activities, students have opportunities for personal growth while preparing for a career.

Engineer's Week

Engineer's Week '84, "Touching Technology," served to promote Iowa State engineering throughout the campus and corporate community through a variety of activities. These events included the traditional E-Week Superstars Sporting Competitions, design contest, student and industrial displays, awards banquet events and FAC, as well as two new categories. These events attempted to increase participation by inviting high school students to spend a day at ISU. Also, a series of speakers from area companies addressed individual classes on the importance of the various types of engineering in the work place.

Eta Kappa Nu is the honorary for electrical and computer engineering students, both undergraduate and graduate.

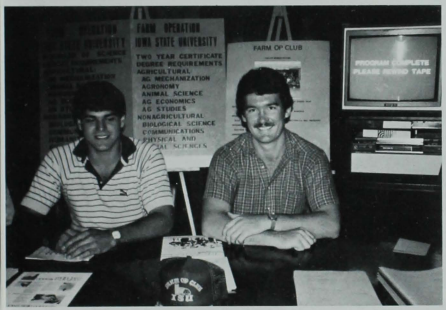

The group sets up and helps attend the VEISHEA display at Coover Hall, participates in the annual departmental student-faculty picnic, hosts the annual engineering inter-honorary volleyball tournament and meets for other social events throughout the year. Service projects include building educational aids for Woodward State Hospital and providing tutoring services. Initiations are held twice a year for the new members.

The Forestry Club is a fun-loving group of people who have a love for the outdoors and a great sense of adventure.

Their activities include canoe and camping trips, barbecues, setting up VEISHEA displays, selling seedlings and Christmas trees, sponsoring a wild-game banquet and conclave, a competition between all of the Midwest forestry schools in events such as two-man buck sawing, tobacco spitting and chain throwing. Being a forestry major is not a prerequisite to joining the club. ◆

Home Ec. Education Club

The Home Economics Education Club's membership is open to all students in the Home Economics College. The club's purpose focuses on preparing students for competent service in positions related to home economics education.

Activities provided by the club help meet this goal. Professional development is enhanced by providing the opportunity to attend Meredith Publishing Company's annual booksale so members can purchase reference books relevant to careers. In addition, every spring, members improve their teaching skills by preparing lessons and instructing classes. Members also participate in VEISHEA open house to promote their club and profession. In February 1984, the club joined the Hotel, Restaurant, Institution Management Club in a study tour to the Minneapolis area. Club members enjoyed fellowship with other home economic students while increasing their awareness of current business practices within the areas of home economics.

Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers

The Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers is directed toward the advancement of the theory and practice of electrical and computer engineering. All electrical and computer engineering students are eligible to participate in the organization. The group's activities include hosting industrial sponsored technical presentations, plant trips to McDonnell-Douglas and IBM, FAC's, a technical paper contest, and an annual faculty-student picnic. One of the most recent efforts of the Iowa State student branch was to create a faculty information guide. This guide directs students to instructors who have backgrounds similar to the students' professional interests.

Institute of Industrial Engineers

The Institute of Industrial Engineers (IIE) is open to all students in the engineering field of industrial engineering. The club keeps gaining popularity year by year. During the 1984-85 school year, IIE increased its membership from less than 200 students to over 325.

Some of the events held this year were administrating the IIE donut stand, attending the regional conference in Lincoln, Nebraska; and holding an IIE sailing and sports day. A major accomplishment was winning the 1984 VEISHEA engineering display.

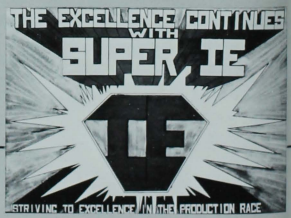

New events planned are a student-faculty-industry interchange, a Hallmark plant trip to Kansas City, an IIE raffle, a meet-the-faculty day, publishing the IIE Informer newsletter, and selling IIE t-shirts. The club also plans to have a football block and tailgates. ✧

Junior Greek was an organization consisting of pledges from the greek system — one pledge from each fraternity and two pledges from each sorority. They met every other Tuesday at various houses throughout the greek system. The purpose of the council was to further social relationships between pledge classes by sponsoring all greek pledge functions and activities. The largest of the activities was the Jr. Greek Olympics. Another purpose of Jr. Greek is to encourage involvement of individual greek pledges at ISU and greek activities. Jr. Greek also introduced pledges to positions that Inter Fraternity Council and Panhellenic held in legislating and operating the greek system. This organization acted as a forum for pledges' concerns and interests and finally as a society which performs services for ISU and the Ames community, such as campus blood drive, and Christmas caroling.

KUSR Expands in 35 Years

KUSR is a student owned and operated radio station that has an all-volunteer staff of 120 people. KUSR is a non-profit organization and is administered by 12 board members and five advisors.

This year was KUSR's 35th birthday. Orginated in Oct. 17, 1949, as KMRA, the radio station was the first independent student-run radio station in the nation. The station will celebrate its 15th anniversary as an FM radio station in April 1985.

KUSR offers a unique, professional sound that is exclusive to the Ames area. The format includes music ranging from progressive rock and urban contemporary to a specialty slot of reggae and blues. In addition to news and sports coverage, there are talk shows which provide input on various topics from the listening audience.

Currently, KUSR is 91.5 FM stereo, nicknamed 91 plus. The station is known for accepting call-in requests anytime, giving away prizes year round, and for sponsoring Kaliedoquiz, the largest student-run trivia contest in the nation. ✦

Mortar Board

Mortar Board is a national senior society whose objectives are to promote the status of women, encourage leadership, maintain a high standard of scholarship and support the ideals of the University. Each spring, the Mortar Board seeks to recognize outstanding men and women who have made significant contributions to Iowa State University. Members are chosen from junior-senior students who have displayed scholarship, leadership and service. The Torch chapter was formed in 1925 and has continued to be active in both ISU and the Ames community. ✦

Residence Hall Week

Hats off to the Halls — Celebrating a Style of Life," was the theme for Residence Hall Week '85. RHW gives the entire student body, but especially the students who dwell in the residence halls, a chance to appreciate the excellent residence hall system at Iowa State. An ever popular event during RHW takes place Sunday through Tuesday when high school seniors descend upon Iowa State for a chance to get a look at the campus and the residence halls.

Other activities during RHW include dances, educational programs, special dinners, a night on the town, mall displays and various intramural events. RHW is planned by students in Central and Subcommittee positions. Working on RHW gives students a chance to have fun while developing their leadership and organizational skills. ◆

Issues

College campuses are always a breeding ground for controversy. Iowa State was no exception, although students were accused of being a little more conservative than those on other campuses.

ISU students still voiced their opinions on subjects important to them, however. Some of the issues which raised controversy were: raising tuition prices both for Iowa residents and out-of-staters, the presidential election, the University's red tape and the feeling that Annes was too small, yet Iowa State was too big.

Scheduling problems and the Government of the Student Body received the usual flack. It all happened in the course of a year . . .

A Growing Dilemma

A single mother of two has been employed at a factory for eight years. She lives in a home which has no refrigerator and no water. She must walk a block or more to get water for her family. One December she had to move out of her home because she did not have enough money to pay her fuel bill. She makes just enough, however, so she doesn't qualify for any kind of aid.

Eight years ago, a 16-year-old became an unwed mother. Because her relationship was so sporadic with her boyfriend, her parents would not permit a marriage. She lived with her parents and five brothers and sisters. In the years to come, she finished high school and went to college with the help of financial aid and several jobs. Recently she graduated from a university but has not found employment. The state gives her $305 a month in aid but she does not qualify for food stamps.

Roberta P., an abused female, has three children. Her husband abuses her at least three times a week. Since she doesn't have a job, she is afraid to take herself and her children out of the household. If she did decide to leave she would have to find a place to live. Most places require a deposit not only on the apartment itself but also on the phone, electricity and gas. With only a high school diploma, she would most likely get only a minimum paying job. Could she make enough to pay for groceries, bills, kids lunches, day care facilities, clothing and leave just a little for any type of leisure activities?

The above are real examples of impoverished women. In documented material by the Iowa Commission on the Status of Women, it is stated that nationally two out of three adults in poverty are women, and that 75 percent of poor Americans are women and children. In Iowa, 49.2 percent of the families below poverty level have a female- head-of-household (FHH).

Contributing factors to poverty are marital status, employment and training, education and health. One of the worst problems for a FHH is in finding child care. In reports by the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, inadequate child care is identified as a major contributor to women's low economic status.

In a documented letter from the Office for Planning and Programming, for a family of two, the monthly gross income can be no more than $651, $804 for a family of three and $957 for a family of four to qualify for a Block Grant subsidy. This means a woman with one child can make barely over minimum wage to qualify for child care subsidy. The average cost for child care for two children is $60 a week.

What happens though, if one of the children becomes ill? Karen Linann, director of the Story County Human Services Center, 713 South Duff in Ames, said most day care facilities won't look after the children if they are ill.

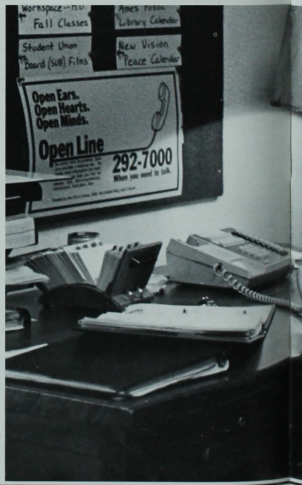

"This means the mothers have to take off work however long the child is sick, if she has no back up. No work means no pay," said Linann.

Linann said if the children are of school age, the mothers will leave them at home to care for themselves.

To help with medical expenses and groceries, these women may try and qualify for the Aid to Families with Dependent Children (ADC), Title XIX and the food stamp program. Many women though, earn just above the cut-off to disqualify them for any type of aid.

Linann said they can make just enough to pay the bills but when medical expenses, lunches for the children, and automobile expenses enter in, their income disappears.

"The heating bill is one of the most difficult bills to pay," said Linann. "A lot of women are still paying off their heating bill by the time the next winter rolls around."

Pam Twedt, Director and business administrator for Open Line in Ames, said many women call asking how they can cope with these situations.

"The biggest problem we hear of is a relationship problem," said Twedt. "After talking with these women we later find out they are at poverty level and are trying to raise children and make ends meet as a single parent. She suspects that financial difficulties foster these bad relationships.

Twedt said she felt that the women who are at the poverty level have a better lifestyle than the ones who don't qualify because they are able to receive aid for the medical expenses.

"We receive two types of calls, those calling about life's pressures and those who need such and such, where should they go," said Twedt, adding that 75 percent of their calls are referrals.

For financial help, women are referred to Mid-Iowa Community Action and Criminal Justice.

"Poverty does exist and is a growing issue," said Twedt.

Lynn Christiansen, director of the Rape, Sexual Assult Care Center in Ames, said, "once a woman leaves her household, she becomes a poverty victim."

One woman who worked with battered women for several years in eastern Iowa, said, "Abused women can remain in the situation or leave and live a life of poverty."

Linann said it takes at least 30 days to file for ADC and during that time, these women must find a place to live, try and find a job and still care for their children.

"Because the struggle is so overwhelming, these women either move back in to their old situation or start another relationship," said Linann.

Since May, 1978, the Family Violence Center in Des Moines has helped 1,380 victims, 1,375 of whom were women. Seventy-eight percent were from Polk County and the rest were from rural areas.

In the Feminization of Poverty booklet it states, "Poverty for us (women) is more frightening than rape. There is a greater chance for us to become poor in today's society and carry the stigma of poverty. This stigma is almost impossible to overcome."

The Wild Rose

The Wild Rose, 134 Campus Ave. in Ames, is for those who need a place to stay and/or a hot meal. Pam Twedt, director and business coordinator of Open Line, said they have referred women and their children to Wild Rose for holiday meals.

In the last year, Wild Rose sheltered 600 guests. Staff member Reenee Holt estimated 250 of those guests were women and their children.

"Since we are the only facility north of Des Moines and south of Waterloo, we get a lot of transient guests," said Holt. "A tremendous amount fall into the poverty category."

Holt said the female guests who find themselves at Wild Rose are there because of a marital problem or are looking for work. Wild Rose has had four or five sexual abuse cases but they are immediately referred to the Battered Women's Center.

"Women are more reluctant to stay here," said Holt, "so we aren't reaching out to all the women we could reach out to."

Not only are women and their children welcomed guests, but transient families and people who can't get into temporary housing at Iowa State are also welcomed. Holt said many times people who can't go home during university breaks stay at the Wild Rose.

Olympic Boycott:

Will the Games Ever be the Same?

The 1984 Olympics will long be remembered for its splendor and grandeur. It will also be remembered however, as the year of another Olympic boycott.

Just as Los Angeles was busily preparing for the Games, a dark cloud moved in. The Soviet Union, fearing terrorism and mass defections, had managed to persuade 13 other countries to back out of the Olympics.

By Tuesday, May 6, East Germany, Poland, Cuba, Bulgaria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Laos, North Korea, South Yemen, Mongolia, Ethiopia, Afghanistan and Vietnam had all joined the Soviet Boycott which Moscow called "nonparticipation." Iran and Albania also decided not to participate.

Because of President Jimmy Carter's boycott of the Moscow Olympics in 1980, some people speculate whether the Soviet Union was simply seeking revenge.

"I don't know if it was revenge or not," said Danny Harris, ISU's 400 meter hurdler. "The Olympics is something which happens every four years to bring the countries together."

Ever since the Games in 1968 politics have played an increasing role in the games. That year, the games were held in Mexico City. Ten days before the games began, more than 40 students and observers were gunned down by police and soldiers during a rally in the Plaza of the Three Cultures in Mexico City.

In 1972, the games were held in Munich. Arab terrorists surrounded Israeli quarters in the Olympic Village. Eleven Israelis were killed and many felt this would spell the end for the Olympics.

Although no blood was shed during the Montreal Olympics in 1976, the Games lost $1 billion. Because of a dispute between New Zealand and South Africa, 30 teams, mostly African, walked out.

More than 50 nations joined America in President Carter's 1976 Olympic boycott in retaliation for the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Olympic Organizing Committee Chief Peter Ueberroth was asked his view on the Olympics in the years to come in an article in Newsweek magazine. He responded, "If you're asking me to be optimistic about coming years, I'm afraid the conversation's over. I just don't know."

From 19 to 21:

An Answer to Young Drinking Drivers' Deaths?

Try and imagine only three bars in Campustown and no alcohol at any school function. That's the way it was at Iowa State in 1971 when the drinking age was 21.

In the spring of 1984, state legislators defeated the issue of raising Iowa's minimum drinking age to 21. The issue was passed on to the U.S. Congress, where the House of Representatives passed a bill that would withhold federal highway funds from states not complying with a standardized national drinking age of 21. The measure was approved 81-16 on June 26, 1984. The bill requires states to raise the drinking age by 1986.

The reason behind all of this was the highway death toll among young drinking drivers. The National Safety Council in Chicago estimated about half the 46,000 traffic deaths in the United States in 1982 were alcohol-related. A report by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration found eight states that raised the legal drinking age showed an average of 28 percent annual reduction in the number of nighttime fatal accidents involving drivers aged 18-21.

Only 19 states have a drinking age of 21 for all alcohol beverages: Alaska, Arkansas, California, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, Missouri, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Utah and Washington.

Four states, Vermont, Hawaii, Louisiana and Wisconsin, have the lowest legal drinking age of 18. Wisconsin, however, enacted a law raising the drinking age to 19 which went into effect July 1, 1984.

ıael Michael Michael

He is famous for his black loafers, white sequined socks, short, black pants, a single sequined glove and, most importantly, his music.

Michael Jackson, the idol of people of all ages. Thousands gathered at his concerts last summer. He's been the subject of such TV shows as Silver Spoons and Punky Brewster. His dance steps are imitated and even commercials used his music as advertising gimmicks.

What is this phenomenon that has swept our country this past year?

Mavis Butler, a second grade teacher at Crawford Elementary school in Ames said Michael Jackson is something for the kids to get excited about.

We all got excited about the Osmonds, the Partridge Family, Bobby Sherman and Shawn Cassidy. Why does Michael Jackson's fan club seem to be so much larger?

"I think kids are more aware of what's going on in the news," Butler said. "They are listening to radios more and watching MTV."

A first-grade teacher, who asked not to be identified, said her students were so hung up on Michael Jackson that she was starting to worry.

"They moon-walked to their desks, wore the single glove and some even signed their papers Michael Jackson instead of with their own name," she said.

Although the Michael Jackson name was said every time one turned around, Debi Pautz, assistant manager of Musicland in Ames said the Michael Jackson album sales have gone down considerably.

"I think when they promoted the Jackson tour so much everyone just OD'd on Michael Jackson," Pautz said.

Not only did the album sales go down but poster and button sales decreased as well.

Joanne Brown, manager of Coach House gifts in Ames said Michael Jackson was the big thing in January and February of 1984 but after the bad publicity he received for his Victory Tour in June, things started to slack off.

"We used to sell hundreds of posters and buttons a week but now we just sell a few buttons," said Brown. "Mostly the teeny-boppers, 14 and under, bought the items. I never saw anything like it."

Election '84

Are you better off than you were four years ago? In 1984, middle and upper-class Americans answered with a resounding "yes" by giving President Ronald Reagan a second term. The 73-year-old Republican incumbent and his Vice President, George Bush, soundly defeated Democratic challengers Walter Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro.

Reagan became the biggest vote getter and Electoral College winner in history with 52.7 million votes and 525 electoral votes. He won in 49 states. Mondale won in Minnesota and the District of Columbia, receiving only 13 electoral votes.

The final totals showed Reagan received 59 percent of the votes, and Mondale won 41 percent. These figures matched a Gallup pre-election poll released just prior to the election.

The 1984 campaign was a one-issue popularity contest. Reagan was given credit for turning the United States economy around after nearly a decade of record inflation and recession. Reagan's campaign emphasized a strong economy and a return to old-fashioned values and patriotism. Other important issues were virtually ignored by voters.

Mondale won praise from women by naming Ferraro as his vice-presidential running mate. The three-term congresswoman from New York was the first woman to be named on a major party ticket. While naming a female vice-presidential candidate accentuated a growing gender gap between voters and set an important precedent for women, the move proved inconsequential as the economy remained the principle issue of 1984.

The campaign was a typical liberal versus conservative battle. Mondale promised compassionate social programs, strong civil rights and control of military weapons. Reagan promised lower taxes, less government and increased military spending.

Some political analysts said Reagan represented a father figure, and his policies reflected a wave of materialistic self-interest which had engulfed the United States. They said this was evident in the Republican Party's strong support from college students — a group traditionally liberal.

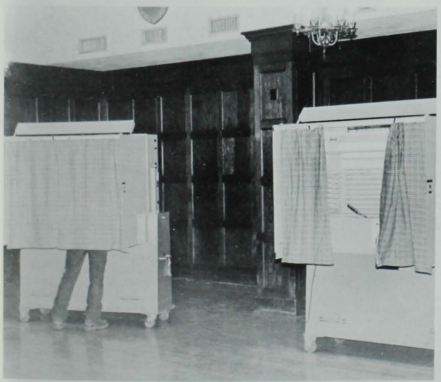

Reagan stimulated the economy in his first term by reducing taxes and cutting government spending on social programs. The president's record on civil rights and foreign policy was less than perfect. But the less charismatic Mondale was not seen by many voters as a satisfactory alternative.

Critics of Reagan called him "the Teflon-coated president — nothing sticks." The president's economic policies hurt the poor by reducing social programs (including student loans), and raised the 1984 federal budget deficit to about $200 billion. Iowa had yet to benefit from the nation's economic recovery as the agricultural community was still suffering a record number of farm foreclosures.

Reagan was the first president to not negotiate arms control with the Soviets since the Cold War began in the 1950s. He fueled the arms race by increasing defense spending and adopting "gunboat diplomacy." And some critics held Reagan responsible for the deaths of nearly 300 U.S. Marines in a terrorist bombing in Beruit, Lebanon, during his first term.

While Reagan emphasized the tremendous change in the U.S. economy, he effectively avoided revealing his plans for a second term and making many campaign promises. He did promise to only raise taxes "as a last resort." Raising taxes was something Mondale said would have to be done to eliminate the budget deficit. Reagan did promise he would negotiate with the Soviets during his second term.

Mondale promised to cut defense spending, return money to social programs and negotiate arms control. Political analysts said Mondale's campaign was pursuing idealistic and intangible issues. Critics claimed Mondale tried to cater to too many special interest groups.

As vice-presidential candidate, Ferraro failed to appel to voting sectors Mondale had hoped for. Despite Mondale's support of the Equal Rights Amendment and choice of Ferraro as his running mate, women did not vote unanimously for the Democratic duo. Mondale also had hoped to win in New York, Ferraro's home state, but failed. Mondale did manage to get a majority of the black and Jewish votes, and votes of those people with incomes under $10,000.

One of Reagan's re-election slogans was "President Reagan — Bringing America Back." The voters overwhelmingly agreed. But political analysts said the victory had to do more with personal affection for Reagan and better feelings about the country than with a strong ideological shift in the political orientation of the nation. The makeup of the House and Senate remained vitually unchanged. The Democrats still controlled the House, and the Republicans retained their six-seat edge in the Senate. —Gary Voogd

Controversial Candidates

Tom Harkin

Pro-Life vs. Pro-Choice, a strong America vs. a peaceful America — these were the issues at the 1984 senatorial campaign, but what Iowans may remember best about the mudslinging campaigns of Tom Harkin and Roger Jepsen were the negative campaign tactics. When Harkin emerged the victor, the national news picked it up as a major defeat of one of the President's rubber stamps.

According to Harkin field staff member Connie Ellerbach, Jepsen began his negative tactics as soon as Harkin announced his candidacy.

"He was mostly knocking Tom with mailings," she said. "The commercials didn't start until after Labor Day."

Ellerbach said Harkin didn't do any kind of negative campaigning until three weeks after Jepsen's commercials aired.

"We had to put out those ads because Tom was behind in the polls for the first time ever," said Ellerbach.

One of the ads she cited as being not only negative, but false, claimed Harkin had one of the worst congressional attendance records. Ellerbach said that during that term Harkin's attendance had been 92% — one of the best.

Harkin was born in Cumming, Iowa in 1939. His mother was a Yugoslavian immigrant and his Irish father worked as a farm hand and a coal miner.

In 1958, he graduated from Dowling High School in Des Moines, and then went on to Iowa State. After graduation he became a Navy jet pilot.

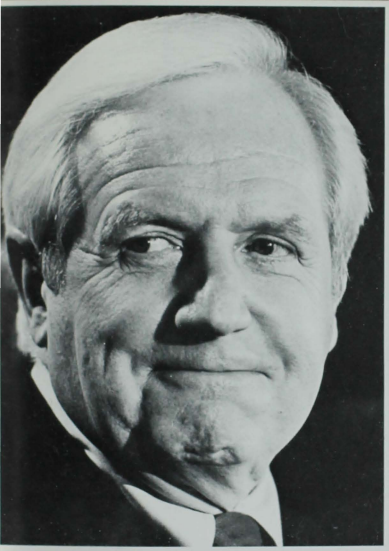

Five years later, Harkin became involved in politics. He worked in the office of Congressman Neal Smith and went to night school at the Catholic University Law School. First elected to Congress in 1974, he has been re-elected four times by the voters in Iowa's Fifth District.

Harkin is probably best known for originating the idea of work days. During his 1974 campaign, he decided to spend his days working alongside Iowans to better understand their needs and concerns. He spent days with a welder, a waiter, a construction worker, a homemaker and a hospital orderly.

During Harkin's congressional terms he has voted against the MX missile, U.S. intervention in Central America and limiting Medicare to the poor. He has voted for full funding for student loans, funding of hazardous wastes clean up and sustaining social security minimum benefits. — Traci Matt

Roger Jepsen

It was a bitter fight until the end, but Roger Jepsen (R) was ousted from his Senate seat in 1984 by Democrat Tom Harkin.

The campaign will long be remembered because of its negative tone. Both candidates accused the other of mudslinging.

During the Oct. 22, 1984 debate between Harkin and Jepsen, the two were asked about the negative campaigning and Jepsen offered Harkin a deal: "If you stop lying about me, I'll stop telling the truth about you."

One of the hottest issues during the campaign was abortion. During his term as a Senator, Jepsen voted against federal funding of abortions and voted for a constitutional amendment banning abortions. However, Harkin voted to allow abortions or to provide federal funds for abortions on more than thirty occasions.

Whether or not to have a nuclear freeze was also an important issue. Jepsen opposed a nuclear freeze while Harkin was in favor of a freeze.

While in office, Senator Jepsen cosponsored and voted for a constitutional amendment to balance the federal budget and he voted for the Grassley Budget Freeze that froze the budget across the board, including the defense budget.

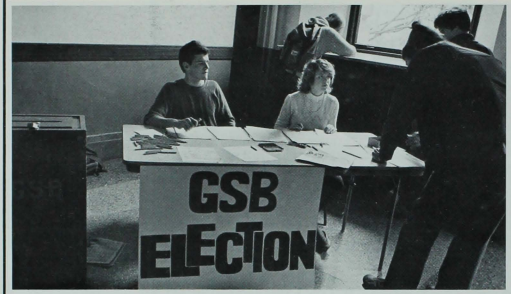

Jepsen held public office a number of years before he was elected to the Senate seat in 1978. He was elected as a Scott County supervisor in 1962 and served until 1966. He was an Iowa State Senator from 1966-1968 and was Lieutenant Governor from 1969-1973.

Some people said that Jepsen had mellowed out during the past few years. Jepsen believes he cooled some because of time and his religious experience.

"The change is a combination of two things," Jepsen said. "One the personal relationship I've developed with Jesus Christ and then the plain facts of life that come with more miles on the speedometer."

Jepsen had a born-again religious experience in 1977. His wife, Dee, also had such an experience in 1970 and Jepsen said that it led to his conversion. In an interview with Dee in October, she said that going to church is the highlight of their week, partly because they don't feel as if they're on stage.

The two were married in 1958 and have six children. Dee worked in Jepsen's office while he was a Senator and helped campaign for him in 1984. —Sheila Streicher

GSB Election

Besides the 1984 presidential election, the Government of the Student Body (GSB) executives were also elected.

The Mike Reilly/Merry Mathes slate won the election by 402 votes in a run-off election.

Before a run-off election was held, the team of Steve Churchill/Grace Kang won with 1,897 votes while the Reilly/Mathes slate received 1,503 and the third running slate, Joe Faiferlick/John Casey received 1,395 votes.

Although the Churchill/Kang slate received the most votes, a slate needed 40 percent of the votes — or 1,918 votes — to win the election.

In an Iowa State Daily article, Reilly and Mathes said they planned to focus on campus issues first, and work with such projects as forming a policy for teaching assistants, strengthening United Students of Iowa and improving GSB's image. — Andrea Schardein

Missing Children:
Reaching Epidemic Proportions.

It can happen anywhere. In a park, a crowded playground, a shopping mall, or on a residential street. A child can be abducted and disappear without a trace.

Although the word kidnap has been in the American language for some time now, a child missing without a trace is quite new to all of us. Every day the newspapers run headlines such as: "Dodd denies he abducted 10-year-old," "House wants faster action on missing children reports," and "Missing newsboy fund hits $111,000."

Supermarket bulletin boards are covered with photos of missing children along with rewards for information leading to their return. Phone numbers of where to call in information on missing children are in phone books around the country. Organizations such as the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, Child Find, Inc., Help Find Johnny Gosch Foundation, and S.C.A.R.E. have been started by those concerned with locating missing children.

According to a National Center estimate, 1.5 million children are missing each year in the U.S. alone. More conservative estimates, however, put the figure between 20,000 and 50,000. The majority of these return home after a short disappearance. Of this number, at least 2,500 children are the victims of homicides. Also, at least 3,000 unidentified people are buried in unmarked graves every year, and hundreds of these unfortunates are children.

Grocery sacks carry missing children's photos on them and television programs such as Phil Donahue, Hour Magazine and Webster have picked up on this issue to warn and make people aware.

Along these same lines is the Love Prints, Love Packet which is put out by the Iowa Department of Public Safety. This packet is for parents as a precaution and to educate their child, and in the event their child should disappear, to immediately provide local law enforcement agencies with all the essential information, including fingerprints and dental records.

Ames was the first city in Iowa to distribute these packets. According to Detective Keigley, 2,000 packets were printed and "without a doubt, more will be printed for other communities."

To add to the number of children who are abducted by strangers, there are those who are abducted by non-custodial parents. That number can be up to 500,000 each year according to Child Find's statistics on missing or stolen children. These figures, however, are only estimates. Figures ranging from 25,000 to 500,000 have been reported.

There are four categories which missing children fall into: run-aways, "throw-aways", abductions by non-custodial parents, and abductions by strangers.

Des Moines Register carriers Johnny Gosch and Eugene Martin, as far as anyone knows, fall into the last category. Gosch has been missing since Sept. 5, 1982 and Martin since Aug. 12, 1984. At this writing, there has been nothing to prove that these boys are dead or alive. But sketches of two men believed to have been seen at the time of Martin's disappearance and one man believed to be seen at Gosch's have been publicized.

According to Child Find's statistics on missing or stolen children, 2,000 to 6,000 are abducted by strangers. Detective Keigley, of the Ames' Police Department, said there are several reasons why a stranger will take a child.

"There are pornographic and sexual usage reasons, ransom, theft, drugs (to deliver and sell), and finally, for homicide reasons," said Keigley.

"You wouldn't believe the number of people who get their highs and pleasures out of torturing and killing children," said Keigley.

Child Find, Inc., was founded by Gloria Yerkovich in Aug. 1980, after her daughter, Joanna, was taken from her in December 1974 by the child's father during a court-ordered weekend visit. After unsuccessful attempts to get her daughter back through law enforcement channels, the courts, $40,000 worth of private investigators and other avenues, she recognized the need for an organization to help other parents in the same situation. Child Find, Inc., now helps locate hundreds of children each year as well as helps children find their parents through a hot-line number, 1-800-431-5005.

On Tuesday, August 28, 1984, Gloria Yerkovich's nightmare ended as she was reunited with her daughter. A news article in The Times-Herald Record headlined the article with "Joy at Child Find." According to the article, Franklin Pierce, Joanna's natural father, was tired of living his life in exile and didn't want to subject his daughter to a life of running anymore.

— Tim Myers

Yerkovich was not alone in having been reunited with a family member that year. On Child Find's list of statistics, they helped locate approximately 525 children (more than two a day) and in 1983, 473 children were located. Their approach to locating missing children is through the exposure of children's photos by national print and broadcast media, publication of a Directory of Missing Children, and services offered directly from national headquarters in New Paltz, New York. Child Find also offers a KID PIX photo-data card program to provide families with up-to-date photo and identification data on each of their children. This program is usually offered at schools or shopping malls.

Not only are missing children a big issue now but the molestation of children is also a controversial issue. Cub Scout packs, day-care centers, schools and church camps across the country have been investigated for evidence of child molestation.

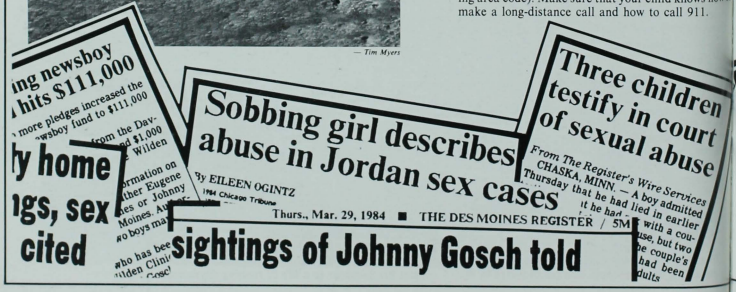

The people who have been found guilty are not just the uneducated, low-class worker. They have been clergymen, babysitters, lawyers, physicians and school teachers.

The book, "The Silent Children: A Parents Guide to the Prevention of Child Abuse" by Linda Tschirhart Sanford, describes the type of person who molests children.

"Men are child molesters in at least 97 percent of reported cases. . . . offenders tend to be young. One investigation revealed that virtually all of the studied child molesters had committed their first offense by age forty, and 80 per cent had committed their first offense by age thirty. Approximately three-fourths of the offenders are known to the victim — possibly as family friends, neighbors, babysitters, or school or church personnel."

Whether you are a parent or planning on becoming one, these tips from Child Find, Inc. may be very helpful for the safety of all children. — Andrea Schardein

— Teach your child his or her full name, address (including city and state) and telephone number (including area code). Make sure that your child knows how to make a long-distance call and how to call 911.

Child Finds Precautions

— Keep a file with your child's photographs (taken at least once a year), fingerprints and dental records. If your child is under 2, take pictures 4 times a year.
— Teach your children to avoid strangers, especially those who offer them presents or ask to take their pictures.
— Never leave your child alone in a car. Always accompany your child to the bathroom in a public place.
— Tell your child never to answer the door while home alone or tell anyone over the phone that he or she is alone.
— Explain to your child what to do in the event that the two of you become separated. If you are shopping, for example, tell your child never to go to the parking lot but to go to the nearest checkout counter and ask a clerk for help.
— Make sure that your child's school or day-care center will not release him or her to anyone without your permission. If you must send an unfamiliar adult to pick up your child, have a prearranged code with your child to be used as a signal.
— Give your child permission to say no to an adult. Emphasize that no one has the right to touch them or ask them to keep a secret from you.
— Try to be more aware of children in public places. If you see a child that appears lost or frightened, do not approach the child. Since children are being taught to avoid strangers, you will only frighten them more. Get someone to locate a policeman or security guard for assistance while you make sure that nothing happens to the child.
— If a child approaches you and says that he or she is lost or has been abducted, act as quickly as you can in getting help. There have been cases of children who have appealed for help and adults failed to act in time before the abductors returned. — Courtesy of Child Find, Inc. ✧

Cyclone athletes received their fans' support as football and basketball season tickets sold more quickly than ever before. Students looked forward to Jim Criner's second year as football coach and hoped Johnny Orr would better last year's National Invitational Tournament basketball season.

Sports excitement wasn't only confined to Ames, though. Three ISU students traveled to Los Angeles to return with Olympic medals. The Chicago Cubs had Illinois students glued to their television sets during the National League playoffs. It was an exciting time for sports, in the course of a year . . .

ISU SHINES WITH OLYMPIC MEDALISTS

The gold shone radiantly upon Iowa State University during the 1984 Summer Olympic Games in Los Angeles. It was a spectacular and golden year for Iowa State and its three Olympic medal winners.

Nawal El Moutawakel of Morocco captured her country's first-ever gold medal in the women's 400-meter hurdles and set a new Olympic record. Danny Harris earned a silver medal in the men's 400-meter hurdles, finishing second only to longtime veteran Edwin Moses. And Sunday Uti of Nigeria won a bronze in the 1600-meter relay.

El Moutawakel became only the fourth Cyclone to ever win a gold; the others were wrestling star Glen Brand (1948), Dan Gable (1972) and Ben Peterson (1972). She also became the first athlete from an African country to ever capture an Olympic gold.

Her accomplishments brought forth a telephone visit with King Hassan II of Morocco. "He said all Arab countries were proud of me and he was proud," El Moutawakel said of Hassan. "As a woman, I think the gold medal for Africa is something else. It will interest more Arab women in sports."

El Moutawakel, just a freshman, won in 54.61 seconds and pulled a mild upset in defeating America's Judi Brown, who took the silver with a time of 55.20 seconds. El Moutawakel's previous best time was 55.37 in the event.

"Inside I feel the same Nawal as the one before. I don't have a big head," El Moutawakel said. She credits her Olympic achievement in coming to America. "I told my mother that I would have never won the gold medal if I hadn't gone to the U.S."

Harris' second place gave the United States a 1-2 finish as Moses took the race in an expected fashion.

"I don't think beating Ed (Moses) is at the top of my list. If I can't beat him personally then I'd like to beat the marks he has accomplished," said the teen freshman sensation.

Harris displayed his Olympic potential by winning at the Texas Relays, the Drake Relays, the Big Eight Outdoor Championships, and the NCAA Outdoor Championships last spring.

Besides his great physical ability, Harris said his grandmother's presence at the Games helped him. "Seeing her there made me feel so good," he said.

Uti finished in sixth place in the 400 meters besides taking a bronze. He felt he could have done better than his time of 44.93 seconds. He had run 44.83 in a preliminary.

"I thought I had a chance of winning something," Uti said. "I knew I was in better condition this year. It was anybody's race."

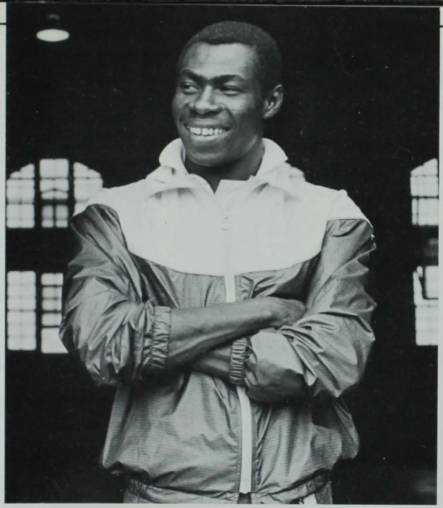

For happy Iowa State fans, Uti's bronze in the 1600-meter relay was another reason for celebration, as were the triumphant finishes of Harris and El Moutawakel.

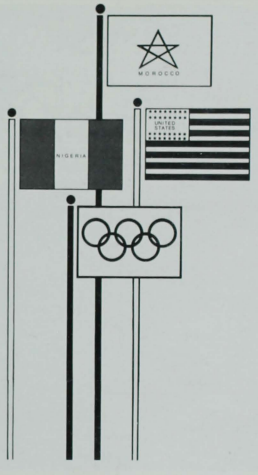

Yes, the gold shone especially bright at Iowa State—in the course of another year.

Men's Track

Four Iowa State men earned All-American honors as the Cyclones finished in a two-way tie for tenth place with Indiana at the 1984 NCAA Track and Field Championships in Eugene, Oregon. It marked the first time in school history that Iowa State had finished among the top 10 nationally in cross country, indoor track and outdoor track in the same year. The Cyclones captured eighth place in cross country and finished fourth in the national indoor track meet.

Freshman Danny Harris won a national title in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles and smashed the world junior record for the fourth time last season with a 48.18 clocking. That time also improved his own all-time Big Eight best and was the third fastest time in the world for the year. Harris finished his collegiate season undefeated in the 400-meter hurdles.

The Cyclones placed third in their respective events at nationals. Sunday Uti recorded a 45.23 time in the 400 meters and Brian Tietjens soared 7-5¼ in the high jump. Joseph Kipsang broke the all-time Big Eight record in the 10,000-meter run with a 28:15.35 time.

ON THE RIGHT TRACK

Women's Track

It was an uncharacteristic season for the Iowa State women's track team in 1984. Traditionally a Big Eight power, the Cyclones slipped to sixth place finishes in both the Big Eight Indoor and Outdoor Track Championships February 24-25 and May 11-12.

"We have exceptional young people, but on paper we may be a year away from winning the conference championship," Coach Ron Renko said. "This team shows the type of potential we need to rebound back to where Iowa State track and field belongs."

Iowa State has a rich tradition in track and field in recent years. The Cyclones captured three Big Eight Indoor Championships in 1977, 1978, and 1979. Iowa State won six consecutive Big Eight Outdoor Championships from 1974-1979, and finished third from 1980-1982.

Renko enjoyed one of his best recruiting seasons last year and hopes to combine quality experience with talented freshmen to move Iowa State back into conference title contention and national levels. "We still have some weak spots and we may not win the title this year, but don't count us out yet."

The Cyclones enjoyed great individual efforts from national qualifiers Nawal El Moutawakel, Bonnie Sons and Kelley Mathews this season. El Moutawakel broke the national collegiate and Iowa State record in the 400-meter hurdles in 55.37, an event she later won the gold medal in at the 1984 summer Olympic Games.

El Moutawakel also set Iowa State indoor and outdoor records in the 440-yard and 400-meter dashes. Her times of 54.15 and 51.84, respectively, qualified for nationals — as did her 11.2 clocking in the outdoor 100-meter dash.

Mathews set an Iowa State record outdoors in the 100-meter hurdles in 13.82. Sons qualified for nationals in the outdoor 10,000-meter run in a time of 32:50.79, breaking the Iowa State record. She also had a national qualifying time in the 5,000-meter run, having been clocked in 16:21.5.

The Cyclones took second at the Missouri Invitational and the Northern Iowa Invitational. Missouri fielded five teams while six teams competed in Cedar Falls.

Nebraska won both Big Eight Indoor and Outdoor Championships last spring. Kansas State and Missouri finished second and third in both meets, respectively.

However, if Renko and his women's track squad have their say, Iowa State will be the major force to be reckoned with in the following years.

GOING THE DISTANCE

Cross Country

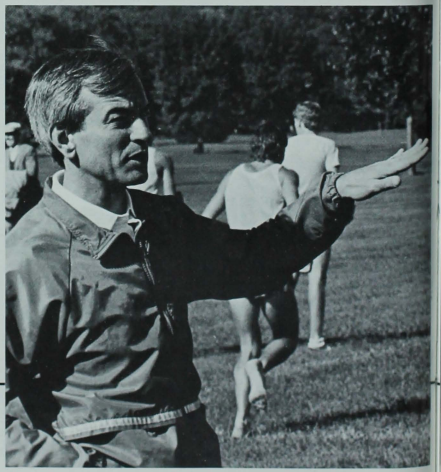

The men and women's cross country teams again dominated their competition last year in traditional fashion, and 1984 appears to be no different. The women finished the regular season last year undefeated in team competition, including another Big Eight conference title and sixth place in the NCAA. Margaret Davis and Suzanne Youngberg paced the Cyclones in earning all-American honors.

Bill Bergan's men's squad won their second Big Eight championship in three years and third since 1974. The team placed eighth in the NCAA, with Yobes Ondieki becoming Iowa State's all-time top runner in the 10,000 meters on any course. Ondieki finished second in a time of 29:41.3 in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, to set the Cyclone record, eclipsing Richard Kaitany's time of 29:47.7 set in 1981 at the NCAA Championships in Wichita, Kansas.

Joseph Kipsang also moved up last year on the all-time list of Cyclone runners. His time of 29:52.4 in the 10,000 meters at the NCAA in Bethlehem put him in third place.

Ondieki ran to second place in the 10,000 meters at the NCAA and Kipsang finished fourth. It was Iowa State's best national finish ever in the 10,000 meters.

The Big Eight title was the seventh conference championship for the women harriers. The team won its second straight District V crown, and made its ninth consecutive national championship appearance under the helm of Coach Ron Renko.

The Cyclones are one of the few teams in the country to have competed in every national championship. Iowa State hosted the first championship in 1975. Until 1981, the AIAW race was the only national championship for women distance runners, and the Cyclones captured the first four titles of the championship. They won again in 1981 and finished eighth in 1982.

The team's undefeated season included team titles at the Midwest Collegiate Cross Country Championship in Kenosha, Wisconsin, Iowa State Invitational, Colorado Cross Country Invitational, Boulder, Colorado, Cyclone Invitational, Big Eight Championship, Lawrence, Kansas, and the NCAA District V Championship held in Ames.

Davis placed fourteenth at the NCAA held in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, in a 17:04.6 timing. Youngberg finished 29th in 17:25.2. Oregon won the national championship, followed by Stanford and North Carolina State.

Iowa State's cross country teams are expected to be just as strong in 1984, a tradition that is likely to continue in the years to come.

UP TO PAR

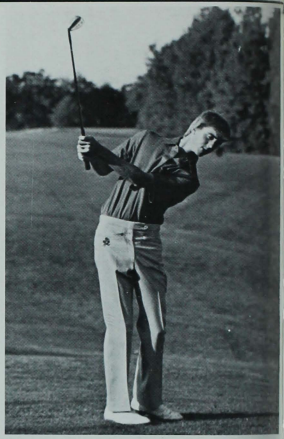

Men's Golf

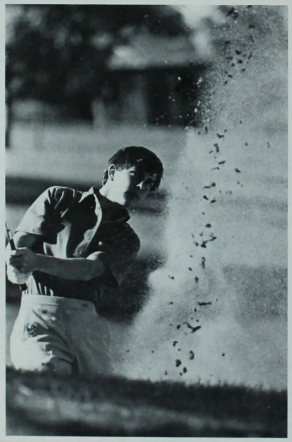

With four of five top golfers gone and a fifth being redshirted, Iowa State men's golf coach Dale Anderson had a team that was almost brand new when it comes to experience.

Leading the 1984 club were lettermen Scott Hinkly and Don Stonionis. A sophomore, Hinkly was a player Anderson felt could compete in any of the Big Eight circles. Junior Stonionis was described by Anderson as "a good player and a great competitor."

In addition, returning lettermen David Hackworthy, Keith Heitritter and Tom Weaver played important roles in the Cyclones' season. This year's top newcomer, freshman Jeff Roseland, played very well leading the team with a round of 75 against Nebraska.

TO A TEE

Women's Golf

Coach Dana Kain's women's golf team opened their 1984 spring season at the Big Red Invitational in Norman, Oklahoma. The squad placed seventh out of a field of eight, with Joan Fails leading the Cyclones with a 249 total.

The Cyclones improved their tournament play by finishing second out of six at the Wichita State Invitational. Connie Carlson shot in excellent form as she finished first in individual competition, hitting 82-73-82 for a 237 total. Fails placed third with 246.

Carlson continued to lead the Cyclones in the Big Eight Championships and at the Stephens Invitational, both played in Columbia, Missouri. Carlson shot 78-77-80 for 235 and a sixth place individual effort in pacing the Cyclones to a fifth place finish in the conference tournament with a 987 total. Oklahoma State took the conference with a total of 934, followed by Nebraska with 959.

Iowa State enjoyed more success with another second place finish at Stephens. Carlson again led the Cyclones, shooting 74-78-78 for 230 total and a fourth place tie in individual honors. Fails hit her best of the season at the tournament with a 236 total.

Men's Tennis

Optimism spread as Iowa State head coach Jim Doerr discussed the tennis season. "I was confident the men would have a winning season. We had hoped to improve on last year's 7-12 record. We are an experienced team with good depth. The experience helped carry us a long way."

Last year, the Cyclones finished seventh in the Big Eight. Doerr said that depth on this years squad is what pulled the Cyclones up in the Big Eight standings. The team won a lot of matches at the four, five and six spots. They were not weak up top, but were strong all the way down the line.

Doerr emphasized serve returns and percentage tennis during the off season workouts. Chris Hubbs, assistant coach, said, "If we learn to play percentage tennis, especially at crucial times, we'll be unbeatable.

The top three positions this year were held by Vince Bottinelli (5-2), Mike Conlon (4-1) and Doug Wenzel (5-3).

ADDED ADVANTAGE

Women's Tennis

The 1984 version of the Iowa State women's tennis team was young, but head coach Jim Doerr did not see that as a disadvantage. "I like having a young team in the respect that I will have these athletes several years and I can mold and develop them."

The Cyclones placed seventh in the Big Eight Conference last spring, but Doerr climbed out of the cellar quickly. "We developed their confidence and the players believed they could play with teams in the Big Eight and beat them."

Elaine Kostopoulos (4-5), Sue Mobed (3-6) and Joy Pennington (5-4) took the top three spots this season. Doerr said the Cyclones have strong depth on the team from the fourth to ninth slots.

Stroke of Genius

Women's Softball

The Iowa State softball team ended the season on a positive note by taking third place in the Big Eight Tournament last spring. It marked the best tournament finish by an ISU team since 1979.

Junior pitcher Lori Young was named most valuable player of the tournament for pitching 45 consecutive innings and posting a 3-2 record. Senior outfielders Cathy Curruthers and Linda Mosch also were named to the all around tournament team. Carruthers earlier had been named to first team All-Big Eight selection. She was also named to the first team of the midwest regional softball coaches' team for her play in the outfield. Coach Deb Kuhn characterized the team as being the strongest she's seen in her two years here.

Mosch was honored as ISU's most valuable player and defensive player of the year at the award banquet May 16. Mary Morrison, who led the team with a .294 batting average, was named offensive player of the year. Young was honored as pitcher of the year and freshman Breana Reedy as rookie of the year for her 8-5 pitching record and 0.99 earned run average.

Jean Laufer was named to the Big Eight all-academic team as well as the District V all-academic team. Karla Schaper was also named on the Big Eight all-academic team.

EXTRA INNINGS

Baseball

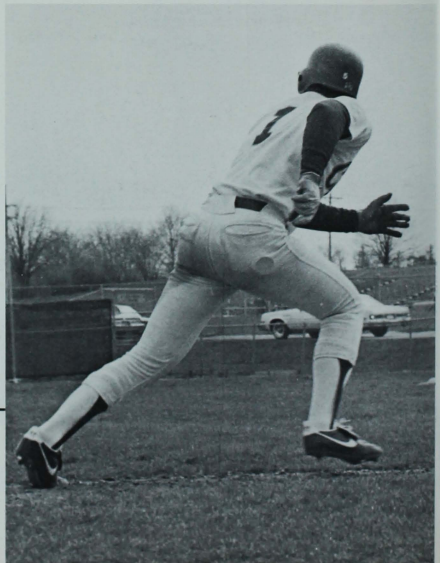

ISU fielded one of its youngest clubs ever this season. There was not one senior on the 28 man roster, but new head coach Bob Randall hadn't let that sour his optimism.

Speed is a team asset. Of the veterans, Kickbush, Ingram, Corbin, DeLong, and Meier all run well. In addition, newcomers Breeling, Boston, Argo and Escoff helped the running game.

Randall has faith in his program. "We had to mend some bridges when coming into this program four years ago, but when you're trying to build something, you have to do it block by block. I'd like to be Big Eight champions, but right now that would be asking a bit much. If we do the things we are capable of doing, our record will take care of itself."

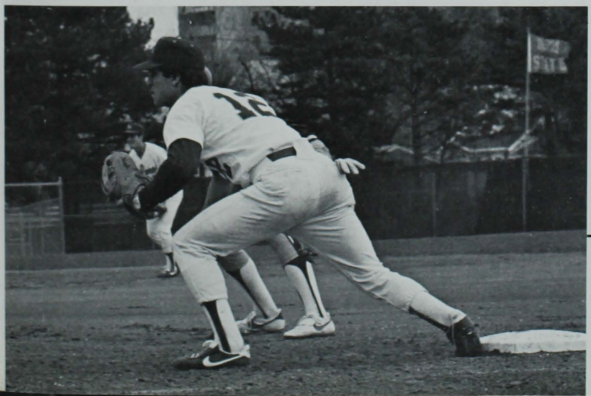

The Cyclones finished fifth with a 6-12 record.

Men's & Women's Swimming

Although the men's swimming team finished just 4-4 in regular season dual meets, the Cyclones placed second at the Big Eight Championships last March and seven Iowa State individual records were broken.

Scott McCadam broke three individual records, including the 50-yard freestyle in 20.21 seconds. McCadam also broke the 100 and 200-yard freestyle in 43.75 and 1:37.92, respectively.

McCadam led the Cyclones at the NCAA Championships, placing third in the 100-freestyle, 14th in the 50-freestyle and 31st in the 200-freestyle. Iowa State finished 21st at the NCAA held March 22-24.

Dave Symons broke the 500-yard freestyle record in 4:27.78 as did Jens Nielson in the 1,000-yard freestyle in 9:34.03. The 400-yard freestyle relay unit of McCadam, Symons, Joe Ehlers and Walberto Colon set a new record in 3:01.67. McCadam, Symons, Colon and Nielson broke in 800-yard freestyle relay record in 6:42.08.

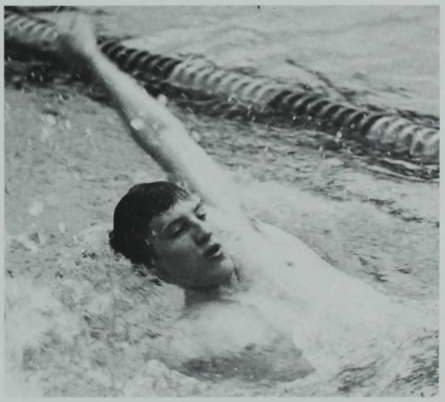

The team finished second at the Big Eight Invitational, third at the Illinois Invitational, fourth at Nebraska's Invitational and sixth at the Southern Illinois Invitational.

The Cyclones have finished second in the Big Eight Championships two of the past three years. McCadam won in the 50, 100 and 200-freestyle. Symons won in the 500-freestyle as did the 400-freestyle relay team.

Iowa State's last Big Eight titles came in 1976 and 1977. Overall, the Cyclones have won 19 conference championships, more than any other Big Eight university. Nebraska, however, has won the last five conference titles.

With several talented freshmen and experienced lettermen returning, Coach Bob Groseth and his Cyclone swimmers expect to improve their record and challenge again for a long-awaited Big Eight Championship.

—Brian Paulson

After disappointing finishes at both the Big Eight Invitational and the Illinois Invitational last season, Coach Ramsey Van Horn and his women's swimming team saw great individual efforts from Karen Groth and Jeanne Fleck.

Groth, a junior All-American, led the Cyclones in 1984 and owned the nation's best time in the 100-yard butterfly. Her time of 55.43 seconds set a new school record and allowed her to compete in the NCAA Swimming Championships last spring. Groth's Olympic hopes were dashed when she failed to qualify for the national finals.

Fleck set school records her freshman year in both the 100-yard and 200-yard backstroke. She was timed in 59.95 seconds in the 100 and 2:09.35 in the 200.

The Cyclones finished fifth in team competition at the Big Eight Championships in Lawrence, Kansas, with 231 points. Kansas continued to dominate the conference and captured first place with 645 points. Nebraska placed second with 542.5.

PRE-GAME PARTIERS

As cars begin to roll into the CY Stephens' parking lot, red and gold sweatered fans pour out of their RV's open their trunks full of assorted goods and begin an almost tradition like festivity . . . tailgating.

Quickly grills pop up from nowhere. All that can be heard is the sound of beer can tabs being popped. Fans from 16-60 begin mingling from car to car sampling different kinds of sandwiches and snacks. "It's a great way to meet new people and get loosened up before the game," said Seeley Avery.

Tailgating is unique in the fact that it is so widely enjoyed across the country by such large groups of people. Tailgating is illegal to a certain extent because of public intoxication laws. However, there is yet to be a raid on any college campus by the local S.W.A.T. team.

"People need a place to go before the game and get into the spirit of ISU and what better place to do it than right where the event will take place," said Tom Pace a frequent tailgater. — Steve Forster

ISU. V. IOWA

It was not the way the Iowa State Cyclones had wanted to begin their 1984 football season. For the second year in a row, the Cyclones succumbed to the Iowa Hawkeyes by another lopsided score, this time 59-21 in Kinnick Stadium.

The Hawks proved to their great intra-state rival how much they had deserved their pre-season Top 10 national ranking.

But, the score was not characteristic of the game in many ways. Iowa State's inexperienced team made many mistakes, including five interceptions and three fumbles which enabled the Hawks to capitalize on many scoring opportunities.

The score also does not show that the Cyclones earned four more first downs, 22-18; had more passing yardage, 327-289; ran off more plays, 80-62; and possessed the ball over nine minutes longer than did the Hawks.

One bright spot was All-America candidate Tracy Henderson catching nine passes for 175 yards, including a beautiful 45-yard touchdown.

Al Watson was Iowa State's leading rusher with 35 yards on 12 carries.

The victory gave Iowa a four-way tie with the Cyclones in their modern-day series, which was resumed in 1977 after 43 years of no play between the schools. Although Iowa leads the series 20-12, Coach Criner is confident the Cyclones can close the gap in the upcoming years. —Beth Burden and Brian Paulson

ISU. V. DRAKE

The Cyclones faced another longtime intra-state rival when they met and defeated the Drake Bulldogs, 21-17, in Iowa State's first home contest in the newly-named Cyclone Stadium — Jack Trice Field.

Iowa State now dominates the series 48-16-4 and has won all but two of the past 11 meetings with Drake in lopsided fashion, including a 35-10 romp in 1982. Drake last beat the Cyclones in 1957.

The win did not come easily as the Cyclones were down 17-0 in the third quarter until Richard Hanson scored with 7:01 remaining. Alex Espinoza completed 24 of 47 passes for 281 yards and Iowa State commanded a 393-142 lead over Drake in total offense.

Tracy Henderson scored the final touchdown on an 11-yard pass from Espinoza and led the Cyclones in receiving with 139 yards.

Coach Criner was pleased with the outcome. "A win is a win. It wasn't pretty, but it's still a win. I was pleased with two things — we did win and the players didn't give up. They did what they had to do to win." — Beth Burden and Brian Paulson

ISU V. TEXAS A&M

Iowa State played with aggressiveness and toughness when they traveled to Texas A. and M. to play the Aggies, but the score ended with the Cyclones suffering a 38-17 setback.

The game was a close contest early into the fourth quarter, with the Cyclones only trailing 17-10. But, Iowa State's running game ran into problems, including giving up the ball three times. However, Iowa State outgained the Aggies in total yardage, 384-374.

Tracy Henderson, the nation's number one receiver going into the game, made Cyclone history as he netted 217 yards for a school record. He beat Jim Doran's record of 203 yards set against Oklahoma in 1950.

Coach Criner was pleased with Iowa State's toughness. "We had a real shot at them in the fourth quarter. Hopefully, this game will take us a long way in maturing as a team." —Brian Paulson ✧

ISU V. WEST TEXAS STATE

The Cyclones recorded their first shutout since October 4, 1980, when they whitewashed Colorado State, 69-0. This time, Iowa State mastered West Texas State, 14-0, in a game full of errors.

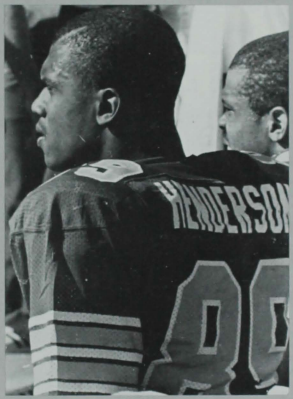

Iowa State did not score until the third quarter when Alex Espinoza pased to Tracy Henderson for a 5-yard score. Henderson scored another touchdown in the fourth quarter and finished the game with 71 yards on seven carries.

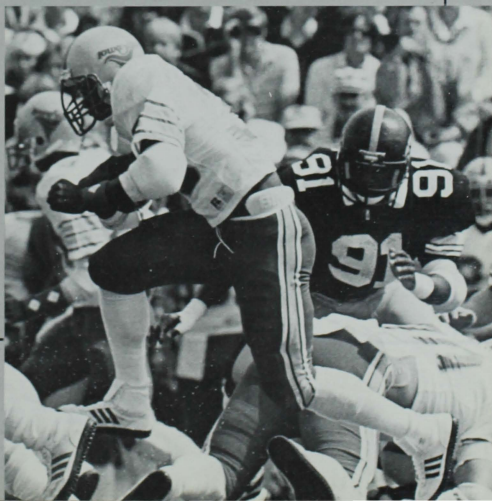

What hurt the Cyclones were nine penalties, two missed field goals, two fumbles in West Texas State territory and many dropped passes.

"We have to find a way to play without making so many mistakes," Coach Criner said. "Our players are pressing. They're trying too hard to do well."

Espinoza completed 22 of 41 passes for 202 yards. Tailback Richard Hanson rushed for 74 yards in 18 carries to lead the Cyclones and caught nine passes for 80 yards.

Criner enjoyed the win, which improved Iowa State's record to 2-2 heading into conference play. "I'm happy about that big goose egg," Criner said. "Maybe we can build some momentum off that." —Brian Paulson ✧

ISU v. KANSAS

The conference opener did not open well, as the Kansas Jayhawks handed the Cyclones their third loss of the season in Lawrence, Kansas. Iowa State committed four fumbles, three interceptions and a blocked punt in the error-prone contest and lost by a 33-14 score.

"We made way too many turnovers to beat a team in this conference, or any other conference. We've tried everything under the sun . . . hard fumbling drills, positive mental attitude, anything to try and get the players to do a better job of holding onto the football," Coach Jim Criner said.

Kansas took the opening kickoff and scored first on a 42-yard field goal. But, Iowa State retaliated by taking the lead in an 80-yard first quarter drive when Alex Espinoza passed for 49 yards, including a 7-yard pass in the end zone to Robbie Minor.

Kansas scored again and never relinquished its lead. The Cyclones scored again in the fourth quarter when Michael Posey caught a 38-yard pass from Alan Hood with 4:45 remaining in the game. It was the last scoring drive for either team.

Tracy Henderson caught seven passes for 87 yards and became Iowa State's career reception leader with 1,795 yards. The old mark was set by Otto Stowe with 1,751 from 1968-70. Henderson moved to fifth on the Big Eight career list, trailing all-time league leader Johnny Rodgers of Nebraska by 555 yards. — Beth Burden

ISU v. COLORADO

Close, but not close enough. That described Iowa State's second conference loss and Colorado's first victory of the year, as the Buffaloes defeated the Cyclones, 23-21, at their own homecoming in Boulder.

With two and a half minutes remaining in the final quarter, Cyclone Marc Bachrodt missed a 26-yard field goal that could have given the Cyclones a one-point victory. But the kick sailed wide by less than a foot and Iowa State had to settle for their fourth defeat of the season.

Earlier, Bachrodt had booted the longest field goal of his career. He kicked a 48-yarder in the first quarter to give Iowa State a 5-0 lead.

The Cyclones moved the ball well in the first half, yet only led 12-6 at halftime. In the third quarter, the Buffaloes riddled the Cyclones with a 17-point scoring spree, including two long touchdown passes of 44 and 85 yards.

Tracy Henderson scored on a 41-yard pass in the fourth quarter, but only netted 51 total yards in three attempts. — Beth Burden

ISU v. OKLAHOMA

Homecoming brought 50,977 fans to Cyclone Stadium to see the Cyclones push the Oklahoma Sooners to the limit in a heartbreaking 12-10 defeat. Although the Cyclones went into the game as 27-point underdogs, they battled and were ahead of the second-ranked Sooners 7-3 after three quarters until three minutes 34 seconds left in the game when Sooner Spencer Tillman ran for a 7-yard touchdown.

The game was Iowa State's first-ever night football contest and was televised to a national audience by ESPN. The Cyclones still had a chance to win with a field goal attempt. But, the final Cyclone drive was ended when Alex Espinoza threw an interception to Keith Stanberry.

The Cyclone defense played its best of the season with middle linebacker Jeff Braswell getting 13 tackles. "Our goal on defense was to shut Oklahoma down in the middle. They're a good team and can break the big one anytime," Braswell said.

Espinoza completed 18 of 35 passes with one interception for a total of 147 yards. David Smoldt led the Cyclones in receiving with 52 yards on five carries. Tracy Henderson was limited to 34 yards on just four carries.

Coach Criner had much praise for his players after the highly emotional game. "This was our best execution of the year. I'm very proud of our team. The players prepared, practiced and executed to the best of their abilities." — Beth Burden

ISU v. MISSOURI

The Cyclones gained respect when they battled the Missouri Tigers in Columbia. For the second week in a row, the underdog Cyclones pushed the favorite to the limit. This time the final score was 14-14.

Missouri led at halftime, 7-3, and extended their lead to 14-3 in the third quarter. Iowa State rallied in the final quarter with a 27-yard field goal and a 7-yard touchdown pass to David Smoldt from Alan Hood.

Hood replaced starter Alex Espinoza after Espinoza broke his left leg scrambling under a heavy defensive rush early in the third quarter. Espinoza was the current Big Eight leader in passing yardage and was taken out for the rest of the season.

Espinoza made 8 of 17 pass attempts for 82 yards, while Hood similarly completed 8 of 15 passes for 86 yards. Richard Hanson was the leading rusher with 60 yards on 14 carries.

Tracy Henderson caught four passes for 50 yards and broke the Big Eight career reception mark in the third quarter. He ended the game with 151 total catches, beating Nebraska's Johnny Rodgers record of 149. — Beth Burden

ISU v. NEBRASKA

It didn't take long before the Nebraska football machine demonstrated why they were ranked third in the nation, as they sailed past the Cyclones, 44-0. Iowa State has now been shut out five times since 1971, and all five have been to Nebraska. The last time the Cyclones have been beaten by a larger margin was in 1975 when they lost 52-0 to the Cornhuskers.

But, the Cyclones played strong defense the first half and most of the third quarter. Iowa State trailed just 10-0 at halftime and 16-0 after the third quarter before Nebraska opened up its scoring spree.

"That was a tough dadgum football game to end up losing the way we did," Coach Criner said. "Nebraska is a much better defensive team than we are an offensive team."

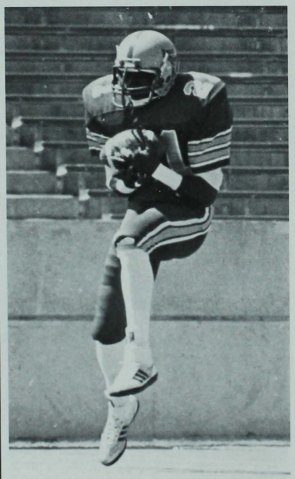

The Cyclones gave up 28 points in the fourth quarter and gave over the ball six times to the Cornhuskers. Alan Hood completed 9 of 19 passes for 37 yards, but tossed three interceptions.

Iowa State could manage only once to cross midfield in the entire game, and produced only five first downs to Nebraska's 15. Tracy Henderson obtained just 11 total passing yards in the disaster-struck game.

However, the game carried special meaning for Jack Trice fans and all other Iowa Staters. At halftime, a special dedication ceremony was held for the newly-named football field in honor of Jack Trice.

Trice was Iowa State's first black athlete and the only person to lose his life competing for the school. On October 6, 1923, Trice was trampled to the ground by four Minnesota blockers. He suffered internal damage and hemorrhaging and died 48 hours later on Oct. 8.

The night before the game, Trice wrote a letter that became a symbol of his courage and idealism. The letter told how he had wanted to excel for the honor of his race and family. The naming of Jack Trice Field is a great step in honoring this man.

ISU v. KANSAS ST

Iowa State hosted their final home game with rain and snow against the Kansas State Wildcats, and came up with their second tie of the season, 7-7.

The wind and sleet hurt the Cyclone's aerial attack. The temperature was 31 degrees with a wind-chill factor of 9 degrees at kickoff.

"The wind was the worst I've ever been involved with," said Coach Criner. "It wasn't just that it was blowing so hard, but it swirled. It caused all kinds of problems. It made it extra tough to do a lot of things."

Iowa State previously averaged 36 passes in its first nine games, but only attempted eight during this contest. Alan Hood completed six of eight passes for 69 yards and one interception.

Tailback Richard Hanson caught one pass for 20 yards and rushed for 76 yards on 22 attempts to lead the Cyclone attack. Tracy Henderson caught two passes for 19 yards.

Kansas State scored first early in the second quarter and the Cyclones could not tie the game until 1:51 left in the third quarter when Al Watson scored on a one-yard plunge.

Although attendance was set at 45,000, the harsh weather sent most of the fans home by the third quarter. The Cyclones improved their overall record to 2-6-2.

ISU v. OKLAHOMA ST

It was another valiant effort that fell just short of an Iowa State victory, as the Cyclones bowed to fourth-ranked Oklahoma State, 16-10, in Stillwater.

Tracy Henderson dropped a pass at the Cowboys' 8-yard line, which could have given the Cyclones a first down with 1:33 left in the game. But an Iowa State victory was not to be.

Iowa State finished the season 2-7-2 overall and 0-5-2 in conference play. It was the first time the Cyclones had failed to win a conference game since 1964.

Henderson led the Cyclones in receiving, catching five passes for 87 yards. Alan Hood completed 17 of 34 passes for 170 yards.

It was a good season for Henderson, as he was named to both Associated Press and United Press International's first team. Henderson and Oklahoma quarterback Danny Bradley were the only unanimous selections to the AP's team. Other Cyclones earning AP and UPI honors included Dave Smoldt, Lester Williams, Anthony Mayze, Jeff Braswell and Steve Little.

Coach Criner commented on the season with optimism. "We played with everyone this season — Oklahoma, Oklahoma State, and Nebraska for three quarters. It's a shame we just weren't quite good enough to get the job done. But we have something to build on. Our seniors can feel proud because if our underclassmen take care of business, they can look back one day and realize they helped get us started."

The fans, too, deserved praise for their help and ever-loyal support throughout the course of the year.— Brian Paulson

Spirits Were High

Cyclone enthusiasm had its ups and downs as did the various athletic teams' seasons. The people who did or didn't create spirit often found themselves on the edge wanting more.

The first evening football game ever at ISU brought much excitement to Jack Trice Field. The Cyclone team equalled the enthusiasm by sending the pigskin wobbling through the uprights making the score 3-0 against Oklahoma. The fans were disappointed at the eventual 12-10 Oklahoma victory, but the Cyclones' impressive performance left a lingering excitement in the air.

While people were turned on and off by the fall's events, all were looking forward to the debut of Johnny Orr's netters. By mid-September student tickets for the 84-85 basketball season were almost sold out. People found themselves recovering from the peaks and valleys of the football season only to be pushed to the edge as the crowds gear up for the wrestling and basketball season excitement. —Steve Forster

CHEERS CHEERS CHEERS

When watching the members of the ISU Pep Council perform all that can be seen is the final product. The work that goes into that final product is the result of hours of practice. Sometimes the Pom-Pon and cheersquads will practice six days a week, 2-3 hours a day.

Practicing accounts for only part of the time spent by both squads. Public relations is also another major part of their duties representing Iowa State at Cyclone Club meetings, campus functions, personal appearances and fundraising for the pep-council.

"We usually have at least one function or fundraising activity a week," said cheersquad captain Deb Johnson.

"Our main purpose is to get the fans excited at the right time and to keep the spirit high when the team needs it," said Mike Robbins, Johnson's counterpart.

Unlike the cheersquad, the Pom-Pon squad members cheer all year for both the football and basketball teams. Cheerleaders can elect to serve for one of the seasons. "Sometimes I would think it would have been great to do poms for just one season and take a break," said former Pom-Pon captain Jill Norris.

"It's a great feeling when you fire up the crowd enough that you can feel the team get more geared up to win," commented Pom captain Melinda Sauers. — Steve Forster

SHOOT FOR TWO

This year's basketball season was much anticipated. Cyclone fans everywhere had rejoiced at the successful conclusion of last year's basketball season.

In the 1984 season, under Coach Johnny Orr, the Cyclones racked up 16 victories (second highest number of victories in school history), finished fourth in the tough Big Eight Conference and earned its first ever berth in the National Invitation Tournament. It was just Iowa State's second national postseason tournament appearance in history. The Cyclones played in the NCAA Tournament in 1943-44.

The Cyclones' record included wins over intra-state rivals Drake and Iowa and 17th-ranked Oklahoma — which was the Sooners' only conference loss.

Iowa State lost in the first round of the NIT in Ames to Marquette, 73-53. The loss, however, brought little complaint.

"It's the best season we've had in years. It was exciting. We drew big crowds and we won 16 games. We had a first division finish in the Big Eight Conference and played in the NIT. I was disappointed in the loss to Colorado which stopped us from going to Kansas City for the Big Eight Tournament and, of course, I was disappointed in the NIT loss to Marquette. But when you look back at it overall, we had a heckuva year," said Coach Orr.

The fan support was phenomenal. Last year, the Cyclones led the Big Eight Conference in attendance by drawing 12,675 fans per game. Iowa State averaged 13,749 fans for seven conference games and recorded seven complete sell-outs. Following the Cyclones' thrilling double-overtime victory over Iowa, Hawkeye Coach George Raveling praised the Cyclone fans and said, "They made the crowds at Michigan State and Michigan look like Mary Poppins. It was the best road crowd I've observed in 10 years."

Orr is proud of his fans. Iowa State was awarded its first Big Eight Conference Sportsmanship Award for basketball for the 1983-84 season. "Our fans should tip their hats," said Orr. "All along we've said we have the best fans in the Big Eight Conference and now they've been recognized for their classy sportsmanship by someone other than ourselves. That's a real tribute and we're quite proud."

Under fourth-year Head Coach Johnny Orr, the Cyclones racked up 16 victories — second most in the school history, finished fourth in the Big Eight Conference, and earned a berth in the National Invitational Tournament — the school's first ever and second national post-season tournament appearance in history. The 1943-44 Cyclone squad played in the NCAA Tournament 40 years ago.

The Cyclones raced to an 11-3 record and earned a top thirty ranking by some national sports publications. Iowa State notched road victories over Drake, Colorado State and Nebraska. The 69-48 blowout of the Huskers equalled the largest defeat Nebraska has ever suffered in the Bob Devaney sports complex.

Iowa State's junior forward Barry Stevens, a second team All-Big Eight selection as a sophomore, had a banner year. The prolific scorer ranked as high as sixth nationally in scoring during the season. Stevens topped last season's honors as he was selected first team All-Big Eight by both the AP and UPI. Point guard Jeff Hornacek, only a sophomore, set a school single season and career assist record. He averaged nearly 7 per game and ranked among the nation's top 15 most of the season.

The Cyclones' 1983-84 season climaxed with its first ever berth in the National Invitation Tournament and second national post-season tournament appearance.

Iowa State hosted the Marquette Warriors, March 15, 1984, in first round tournament play. Although the victim of a 73-53 defeat, the Cyclones discovered their great potential.

The 1984-85 campaign brought much excitement to Cyclone followers. For the second straight year, Iowa State demonstrated again they were the state's best team, beating the Iowa Hawkeyes 54-50 in an emotion-filled game. It was the Hawkeyes' first loss of the season, and the Cyclones' first win in Iowa City since 1921.

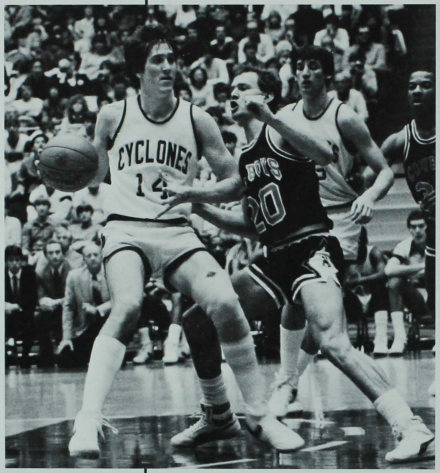

Iowa State went on to defeat other intrastate rivals Drake and the University of Northern Iowa to claim the mythical state championship a second straight year.

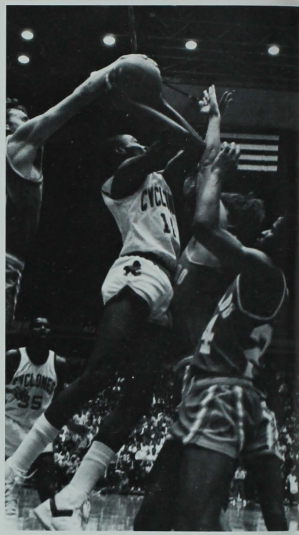

Additional victories were posted over Mankato State, Creighton, Augustana (S.D.), Tennessee, Denver, Colorado State, Cornell, Morgan State, and Abilene Christian. Iowa State stood at 12-4 midway through the season, losing to powers Indiana, Virginia Tech, Washington, and Arkansas. All four were Top 20 rated teams at the time the Cyclones played them.

Forward Barry Stevens was the team's greatest asset. His numerous honors included being selected honorable mention All-American by the Associated Press, first team All-District Five by the United States Basketball Writers' Association, first team All-Midwest by Basketball Weekly, and first team All-Big Eight by both wire services.

Stevens finished second in the Big Eight to Oklahoma's Olympian Wayman Tisdale in scoring and 19th nationally with a 22.2 average. His accomplishments are many.

Jeff Hornacek became Iowa State's all-time career assist leader and was named first team Academic All-Big Eight. He earned honorable mention by both AP and UPI.

Ron Harris was selected to the All-Big Eight Defensive Team for the second straight year by UPI. David Moss led the Cyclones in rebounding with 5.9 per game.

Orr is confident this year will be even stronger and more exciting, with Stevens, Hornacek and Moss all returning. He was especially pleased with this year's talented freshman recruits. "This group certainly has to rate as one of my best recruiting classes ever, including those when I was at Michigan. We went out and recruited the kind of people to fit our style of play."

This season, the Cyclones played Creighton, Drake, Iowa, and Indiana, besides having participated in the Volunteer and Rainbow Classics.

"Success breeds success," said Orr. "Now when we talk about our goals — the NCAA, NIT, and things of that nature, they are realistic goals. We've been there. Our players realize they can do it again. It's convincing."

Under the coaching of Orr, such goals are certainly attainable and close to being achieved — perhaps, just in the course of another year. —Brian Paulson

BACK IN THE TOP RANKS

WRESTLING

A young and rejuvenated Cyclone wrestling team improved immensely from last year's disappointing 13-7 dual-meet season. The Cyclones finished the 1984-85 season with a 20-9 record, the first time in Cyclone history they have gone over the 20th win mark.

The Cyclones were ranked fourth in the nation most of the year and looked forward to placing in the top four again, a spot the team relinquished a year ago. Head Coach Harold Nichols said the youthfulness of this year's team will become an asset two years from now when the Cyclones will seriously challenge for the national championship.

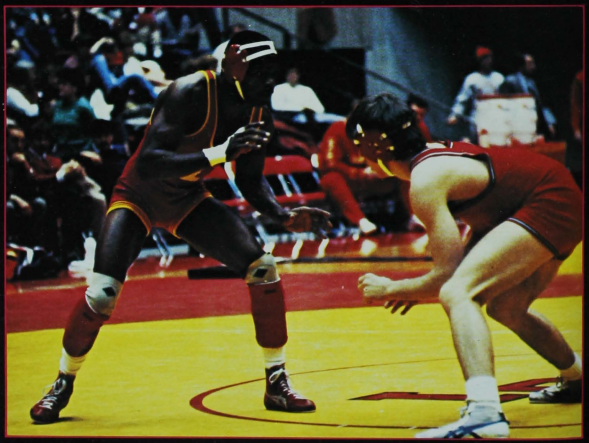

Iowa State was led by All-American Joe Gibbons, a junior, and senior John Thorn. Gibbons and Thorn both ranked in the top five all year at 142 and 126 pounds, respectively, and showed the most potential for NCAA individual titles. Cyclones Bill Tate, Mike VanArsdale, John Heropoulos, and Daryl Peterson were also nationally ranked in the course of the season.

Iowa State's losses came to Arizona State, Tennessee, Wisconsin, Michigan, Iowa, and Oklahoma State. Iowa has won the national championship every year since 1978, a dynasty Iowa State fans hope to see end. The Cyclones last won the NCAA crown in 1977.

When Coach Nichols announced his resignation during the season, a legend ended at Iowa State. It is an understatement to say no one has done more to contribute to the betterment of wrestling in the United States than Nichols.

Over a 37-season collegiate coaching career, Nichols has compiled outstanding records of 494-92-14 overall, 457-74-11 at Iowa State. During that time, Nichols guided the Cyclones to six NCAA team championships and 11 second place finishes. Prior to last season, the Cyclones never placed worse than fourth in the last 20 years.

Nichols has presided over the NCAA Championships as the host coach four times (1966, 1974, 1979, and 1982). The 1979 and 1982 championships have been recorded as "the most financially successful in history."

A few of the many honors given to Nichols include being elected to the National Wrestling Hall of Fame and being named National Coach of the Year four times. He was selected Wrestling Man of the Year in 1966 and 1982. He is also a member of the Wrestling Coaches' Hall of Fame, Iowa Wrestling Hall of Fame, and the University of Michigan's Hall of Honor.

Nichols' successor has big shoes to fill to match the accomplishments of Nichols. Speculation ran rampant that Dan Gable, Nichols' most famous pupil, would return to his alma mater to coach the Cyclones. If so, Iowa State wrestling fans could rest assured that the Cyclones would continue to challenge for the top in the years to come. — Brian Paulson ❖

SPIKERS NET PROFIT

The bright star that guided the ISU volleyball team for four years has moved on, but the light produced by the 1984 team may prove even more radiant.

"We had no star. No player carried the team on her own. In the past, the Cyclones have been dominated by an outstanding middle blocker. Now we have talent in all six positions. I think that's why our team was so successful," said Head Coach Mary Fischl.

Leading the way were juniors co-captains Amy Montgomery and Alicia Reynolds. For the first time, Fischl had the luxury of running either a 5-1 offense or a 6-2, which means two players can set the play and the Cyclones can keep opposing defense more off guard. "We had more at setter than we ever had before. It was a real asset because we had the option of running more offenses and could still be strong if one setter got injured."

Of course, Fischl expected the Cyclones to be one of the challenges of the Big Eight. ISU finished second in the post season tournament in 1982 for their best showing ever and then tied for third last year. —Beth Burden

HERE'S THE TIP-OFF

Iowa State introduced a new head basketball coach for the 1984-85 season in Pam Wettig, who had been head coach at Miami (Ohio) University for eight years.

Improvement is the key word for the 1985 season. The Lady Cyclones suffered through a disappointing 4-24 record in 1984, including a winless conference schedule. Seven of those games, however, were lost by four points or less.

"One of the main things I have to do will be to increase confidence in our players and get them thinking about winning," Wettig said. "We might have less talent than some of the teams we play but I feel if we can get 100 percent from our players, we can win ball games."

Senior center Tonya Burns led the Cyclones last year in rebounding and scoring. She averaged 16.4 points and 8.4 rebounds per game and was named to the second team All-Big Eight for the second consecutive year. She is Iowa State's leading career rebounder and top scorer. She scored a career high and school record 42 points against Nebraska last season. Burns holds over 20 Iowa State records.

Forwards Monica Missel, Rhonda Thacker, Kari Olson, and Anne Holland all returned. Missell was last year's third leading scorer (8.4) and third best rebounder (4.7), while Thacker averaged 7.8 points and 4.8 rebounds.

The Cyclones met intra-state rivals Drake and Iowa this year along with traditional power Creighton and Division II national champion Central Missouri.

The rugged Big Eight was won by Kansas State in both the Big Eight Tournament and conference standings last year. Missouri finished second and Oklahoma State third.

Improvement is the biggest goal. "We want to be respectable and that is difficult to define because the conference is so good. I want to win some conference games. One major goal is to get out of the cellar. I want us to be respectable — to have something concrete to build on. I want to start establishing an Iowa State tradition," Wettig said.

Such a tradition would surely parallel the success and strength of Iowa's high school girls' basketball program, the nation's finest. UNPARALLELED SUCCESS

Consistency is one word which can best describe Iowa State's Men's Gymnastics Team. For the fourth year in a row, the Cyclones captured fourth place in the NCAA, this time under first year head coach Dave Mickelson.

Brett Finch tied for fourth place in the floor exercise to pace the Cyclones at the NCAA Championships in Los Angeles, Calif. Iowa State finished ahead of always-tough Oklahoma and Nebraska, winners of the past five NCAA team titles. Last year's squad also claimed titles at the Midwest Championships and the Rocky Mountain Open. The Cyclones finished 7-4 in dual meet action, and the squad's top score last year of 280.50 marked the highest point total of any Cyclone team since 1981.

The Cyclones rolled to victories over Northern Illinois, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and Houston Baptist in the last season. Its four losses came to the hands of Nebraska, Oklahoma, Southern Illinois, and Ohio State.

Iowa State began the 1984-85 season on a slower start, placing sixth at both the Big Eight Invitational in Lincoln, Neb., and the Windy City Invitational. But, the Cyclones captured second place at the Midwest Open in Rolling Meadow, Ill. The team finished behind the Huskie Gymnastics Club 271.25 to 270.30.

For the first time since 1969, Iowa State lost a dual meet to intra-state rival Iowa, 274.95 to 274.50 in a closely-contested battle. The Cyclones previously had beaten the Hawkeyes the past four consecutive years. Despite the loss, Iowa State still leads the overall series, 4-3.

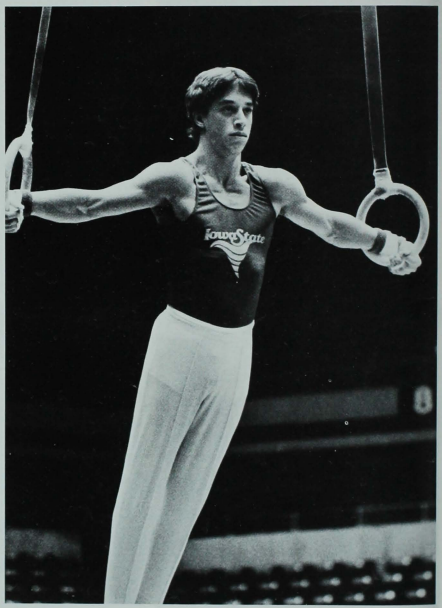

The Cyclones hosted the Japanese National Team and became the victim of a 181.8-172.4 loss. "They are a well-coached team with superior athletes. We were glad to have the opportunity to compete against them," Mickelson said.

Mark Diab won the still rings against the Japanese with a score of 9.75, while Shane Sanders captured first in the parallel bars with a 9.45 to lead the Cyclones.

Iowa State finished the season with duals against Wisconsin, Minnesota, Southern Illinois, Northern Illinois, and Ohio State. The Cyclones also sought revenge when they tangled with the Iowa Hawkeyes for a second meet on Feb. 23.

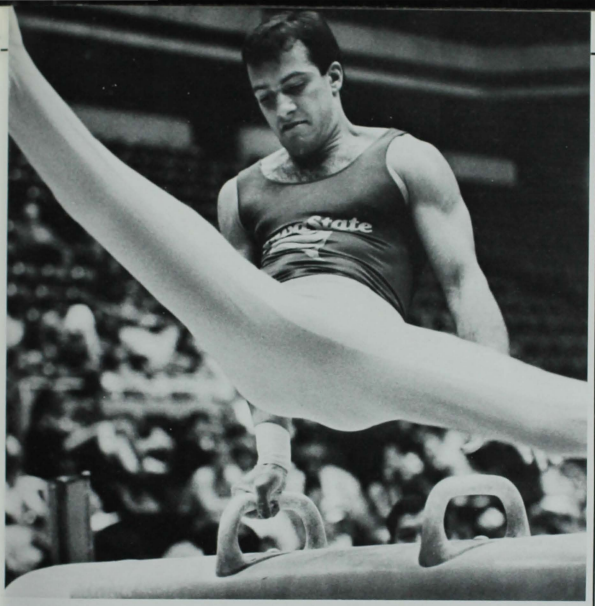

With strong performers returning, Mickelson expected the Cyclones to fare well at the Big Eight and NCAA Championships in Lincoln. Several key performers were lost from last year, including Nissan Award nominee Finch, Scott George, and Mike Stensland. The key to the season rested with the development of the younger team members, Mickelson said.

Iowa State has a rich tradition in men's gymnastics.

The Cyclones have finished among the nation's top 10 teams every season since 1965. During those years, the Cyclones won three national championships and 10 Big Eight team titles, double the total of the nearest conference rival. In addition, Iowa State performers have won 72 conference individual titles.

Such high standards have given the Cyclones an 85 percent winning percentage since 1963, illustrated proof that Iowa State gymnastics is one of the most successful programs in any inter-collegiate sport over the past two decades. —Brian Paulson ✧

TOTAL BALANCE

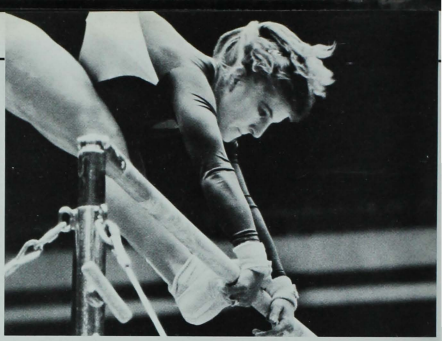

Coach Donna Kramer had reason to be optimistic when the Cyclones opened their 1984-85 season. Last year, the Cyclones broke four of five individual records and two team marks. This year, six letter winners, including three seniors, returned and provided much-needed experience and leadership.

Junior Kathy Edwards, who holds four of the five individual records, and seniors Debbie Diskerud, Mimi Starks, and Sara Krause led the 21-member squad this year.

"I am optimistic about the season," Kramer said. "We keep getting better every year and the people who are coming in are much more skilled than in the past. We should blend our experience and youth well to perform stronger as a team.

Although the Cyclones expect continued improvement, Kramer said it would be hard to continue the record-breaking trend of the past two years. In 1982-83, the Cyclones broke every team and individual record. "One of our goals will be to continue to score better as a team," Kramer said. Iowa State's best team mark was set last year at 173.90 against Southern Illinois. Kramer hoped to see that mark crack the 175-point total this year.

The Cyclones posted wins over Indiana, British Columbia, Wisconsin, and Illinois-Chicago last year enroute to a fifth place finish in the Big Eight Championships held in Norman, Okla., March 9-10. Oklahoma won the conference crown with 179.05 points. Nebraska placed second, followed by Missouri and Oklahoma State. The Cyclones have not competed in the Regional Championships since 1982, when the team finished second.

The Cyclones faced all four of the Big Eight rivals this season in addition to facing Big Ten powers Iowa, Michigan State, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. Iowa State also hosted a team from Japan.

Three freshmen — Ann Lohmann, Tracy Remien, and Liebe Teller — contributed to the team's depth and overall growth. "They come from good gymnastics backgrounds and are going to push the people we have now on the team. They like to win and we can use that attitude," Kramer said.

Meanwhile, Iowa State remains on course and continues to make steady gains and improvements one year at a time. The Cyclones hope to be ready some day to challenge for the conference championship and other titles in the years to come. —Brian Paulson

JUST FOR THE FUN OF IT

Iowa State offers 34 different sports clubs open to all students under the Sports Club Program. Under the supervision of the Sports Club Coordinator and Sports Club Council, the Program is designed to serve individual interests in various sports club activities and is student-oriented in every way.

Each club is founded under its own constitution, elects officers, conducts regular meetings, keeps records, may receive GSB funds, and usually holds practice sessions or special events.

The Sports Club Council is composed of an elected representative from each sports club. The Council is responsible for budget decisions, promotion, and policy and scheduling problems.

One of the more stronger clubs has been the ISU Hockey Club. In 1984, the hockey team defeated Notre Dame to win the Central States Hockey League Championship. Part of the club's success is due to the fact that it is self-supporting.

Sports clubs provide competition at specialized levels plus gives students an opportunity to practice with other students who share the same interests. —Brian Paulson and Beth Burden

I.M. A CHAMPION

Iowa State's intramural program is the most visible of the services offered by the University Recreation Services. Over ten thousand students are now involved in the wide variety of team sports, individual sports, and dual events.

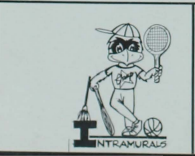

John Meyer, intramural program coordinator, has seen Iowa State's strong intramural program become even stronger. When Meyer became coordinator in 1978, only 30 sports were offered, and the biggest sport had only 300 teams entered. Now, over 55 sports are offered, and the largest sport has more than 600 teams.

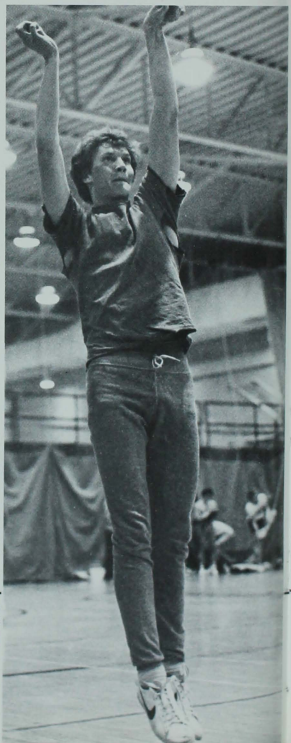

Meyer said there has been a 237 percent increase in the number of teams from ten years ago. A major increase has been in the participation of women, which has increased 250 percent since 1973.

Other universities look in awe of the success of Iowa State's recreational services. "I can't think of anybody that's got a more comprehensive program than we do," Meyer said. "We're the best." Of course, the awarding of T-shirts to winners has become a major factor in intramural participation. Go for it, Brew Crew! —Brian Paulson

Housing

Temporary housing was utilized again this fall as the dorms overflowed with students. But University housing wasn't the only popular place to live. Greek houses were full too, and off-campus apartments could demand almost any amount for rent.

Most students were stuck paying high rent if they wanted to enjoy the off-campus lifestyle. Apartments close to campus were especially popular and students paid extra-high prices for them. But for nine months many students didn't mind too much. The risky part was finding someone to sublet the apartment for the summer. Moving to Ames and back home again all happened in the course of a year . . .

ALTERNATIVES

Plenty of changes certainly came about in the houses this year regarding alcohol consumption. A new housing feature became available to Iowa State students in the fall for the first time as a special interest option: alcohol-free houses. In a survey taken at the beginning of the fall semester, about 85 percent of the students living in alcohol-free houses were found to really enjoy the environment.

Two such houses now exist at Iowa State. One is Barker, a co-ed house in the RCA and the other is Johnson, an all-male house in TRA.

Scott Plavnick, resident assistant of Barker, feels the house has a great "family atmosphere." Many on the floor agreed that the new alcohol-free house was quieter and cleaner than their previous residence. Ken Doak, resident assistant of Johnson, agrees. "The people are happy," he said "the house has a more easy-going atmosphere."

However, not all have been this happy with the new living arrangement. According to the survey, a handful of residents feel disappointed with such things as the social activities and what they feel to be too much conservatism on the floors.

The new issue of raising the drinking age from 19 to 21 has put a new turn on the future of the alcohol-free houses. Despite the large amount of student interest in continuing the houses, there is a question as to whether or not they will continue. If a new drinking age was strictly enforced, most houses would have to prohibit alcohol consumption.

Another thing that caused a little uproar in the houses regarding alcohol consumption was the decision by the University to ban house signs that publicize or relate to alcohol. A few examples of this could be seen on the house signs of Bergman, Jones, and Dana. Bergman's featured the name of the floor spelled out on beer kegs, Jone's resembled a Busch beer can, and Dana's was hung vertically with a martini olive placed in the letter "D." The University felt that this did not promote a proper image for the houses.

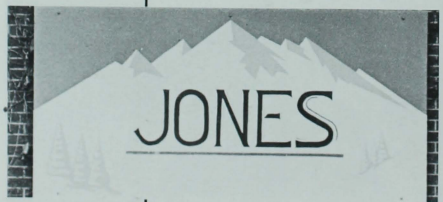

These decisions regarding alcohol use by students prove an interesting change for Iowa State housing, another one of the changes that occurs through the course of the year . . . — Sheila Streicher and Megan Hennessy.

Seniors

After years of final exams and great expectations, you finally find yourself walking down that long row to face your parents and friends for that big day — graduation.

It is a time to be cheerful and often fearful. The expectations that you have built over four or more years are finally about to become reality. You realize that the beginning of a new life is ahead. Extended educations await some, jobs and families await others.

More importantly, you come to the realization that throughout your entire life you have been looking ahead to better schools, more friends, whatever it may have been. You now have reached the realization that it's an annual cycle. Remember, good things await you through the course of this year, and every following year . . .

SENIOR CLASS COUNCIL

Get the seniors involved and keep them involved. This not so easy task has become the major undertaking of the senior class officers for the 1984-85 academic school year.

The Senior Class Council is run by a president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer plus many committees. Together the group carries out activities for the senior class and keeps them informed on happenings such as the Senior Class Challenge, the Senior Class Gift, and "Perspective," a publication directed toward the problems often confronted by seniors.

The four officers, however diverse their jobs may be, all agree that the seniors have to get more involved and keep involved, and they all acknowledge this as their main goal.

"I want to form a bond between the seniors and ISU," said Barb Dawson, president of the senior class. "I want to make them (seniors) want to keep contact with the University after they graduate."

The Sioux City native who is majoring in psychology, speech and pre-law, was impressed with what the Council did in the past and wanted to get involved with the council because she was interested in a leadership position. "I think I am open to new ideas. I believe the work the Senior Council is doing is important. I am enthusiastic and persistent in the cause I'm working for. I feel these qualities make for a good leader," Dawson said.

Dawson, who is the first woman president of the senior class, hopes that this may set a precedent for women in the future. "I hope women will look at me and see that it is possible for women to be in a leadership position and do a good job."

As president of the Senior Class Council, Dawson plays a dual role. She acts as a liasion between the executives and the various committees and she also is the main connection between the council and the senior class. Dawson finds this job rewarding because it creates a learning experience for her and increases her visibility to see things more clearly in other areas. "My job is much better than I expected," Dawson commented. "The committees are really competent, and they don't need much guidance," Dawson said.

Although the councils are keeping ahead of the game, Dawson claims that there isn't enough time to get everything done that the officers would like to get done. "There's so many things we could be doing that there isn't enough time for," Dawson said. But she does feel that the changes for the senior class will occur gradually and is hopeful for positive results.

Some of the changes that Dawson will see during her term of office is the reconstruction of the organization. Dawson explained that this year the Council changed its format and created one large group instead of several divided sub-committees. The Council also added an External Relations Committee which has an off-campus, a Greek and a Residence Halls representative voicing the opinions of the particular seniors.

Dawson went on to say that she hopes there will be more diversity in the Council in the coming years. She also hopes that with more publicity and outreach to the students, more juniors will run for a senior class office in the spring.

"I think you should always stay in contact with your college. ISU students should always be a part of ISU," said Mike Flesher, vice president of the senior class.

Flesher, a business major, found that being a senior class officer was his last chance to be involved with ISU. "I ran for vice president because it was my last chance to do something for ISU, and is something I'll still be involved in after I graduate," Flesher said.

The duties of vice president, Flesher explained, are to work with the committees on the Council and to basically stay on top of everything. Flesher said that vice president carries out orders that the president feels are necessary. The vice president also helps out on promotions such as the Senior Class Gift, and the Senior Challenge.

Not only does Flesher give business advice, but he keeps the council's morale up. "I try to keep the spirit up and the momentum going," Flesher said.

Being president of his fraternity, Phi Kappa Alpha, Flesher feels that he has the qualities that make for a good leader. "I think I can work with a lot of people." He feels that a good leader is able to see more than one side of an issue and be able to work with people in a given situation when it occurs. "The most important quality of a good leader, Flesher said, "is having the responsibility to handle different assignments."

Flesher's main assignment for the Council this year, is to get as many seniors involved and keep them involved. "What I'm interested in right now is seniors. I want to let seniors know that a Senior Class Council does exist and that they should get involved with the Council by asking questions," Flesher said.

When talking about getting involved with the council, Flesher mentioned a new type of pride that students take on once they become seniors. Flesher said that it's like waking up one morning and realizing that this is it. And you start to realize all of the things ISU has done and meant to you in the past four or five years. Flesher claims this is why the senior class's gift to the University has always been such a success. "The seniors are giving something to the University in return for what the University has done for them," Flesher said.

The only advice that Flesher would like to offer future senior class officers is work well with other people and, if anything, get the seniors involved.

"I want to excite more juniors to run for the council, so they stay involved when they are seniors," said Jeff

ACT OF 85

Henningsen, secretary of the senior class.

Being a former Cyclone Guide, Henningsen was indirectly involved with the Senior Council and was impressed with the opportunities it opened up for seniors. Henningsen plans on opening up more opportunities for seniors by being a positive force within the council.

"I want to be a positive input for the council," Henningsen said. "I want to keep a positive attitude going on in the council."

Henningsen feels that going into the office everyday will help the council run more effectively, and therefore; create a positive force.

"You have to be dedicated to a position in order to do it well," Henningsen said.

Henningsen's main duties as secretary are to write thank-yous for various functions, writing out invitations for upcoming events, and keeping the minutes at all meetings.

Henningsen claims that being a good leader enables him to contribute positive input within the Council. "I try to be organized in my job, get my work done as soon as possible and try to work well with the people above and below me," Henningsen said. By working well with the people on the committees, Henningsen feels that the council will be effective and will therefore, have a great year.

"The experiences with the senior class will be a memorable one," Henningsen said. "I like representing the senior class, and I know it'll be something I will look back on with fond memories."

"We do a lot of things for the senior class, and we want people to know that, and get more involved," said Cary Miller, treasurer of the senior class council.

Being treasurer of the senior class council, Miller is in charge of making out the budget for the senior class. Miller said the class will be allotted $25,000 for the entire year, but it must be divided between the five committees including: External Relations, Senior Outlook, and the Senior Class Challenge. "I draw up the budget in the fall and for the rest of the year I supervise the committees to make sure they stay within the budget," Miller said.

Personal satisfaction is what Miller claims he gets out of his job. "I get more personal satisfaction than group thanks, and that means a whole lot more," Miller said. But everything Miller does concerning his job, he does for the senior class and he hopes that this year's committees will be better than any previous committees. While talking about the devotion Miller has toward the senior class, the special type of pride that Flesher talked about suddenly took over, as he gave these words of wisdom to the underclassman, "appreciate your college years, because you're only in college once." — Julie Ellwanger

AUGUST

My last semester. I can't believe it. I have a feeling I'll be using the word "last" a lot in the next few months — my last truckstop cinnamon roll, last walk around the zodiac, and last test. Hope my friends will bear with me.

Boy, is it hot. Wouldn't you know I'd forget a fan for my unair-conditioned apartment. At least my classrooms are air-conditioned.

Bought books today. Waited until the second week of classes. Just think, it's the last time I'll fight the lines of book buyers. Only paid $100, my cheapest semester yet.

SEPTEMBER

I can't believe I've been reading the wrong book the past two weeks. I bought the book above the sign reading, "JLMC 450". But it was last year's book. The new ones won't be in for a while yet. Hope I save my receipt.

Finally got my resume done. Looks good, if I do say so myself. Now I've got to figure out how to use the placement office. It seems so easy when they explain it.

Went to the Elton John concert. Here I go again — but it could be my last college concert. Come to think of it, Elton John was my first college concert too. Am I getting to sentimental?

I signed up for a senior sitting with the Bomb yearbook. I think Mom wants a picture of me more than I do. Why do photographers make you say dumb things? "Budweiser", "lover," "bear" — give me a break. The traditional "cheese" must be out of style. Personally, I prefer to smile without talking at the same time.

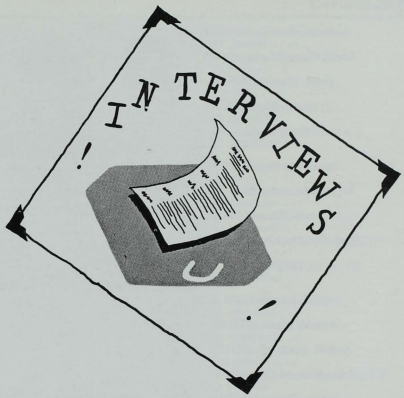

Mom and Dad came down for my last Parent's Weekend. Made the usual trip to Hickory Park.

OCTOBER

So much for school spirit, I'm going home for Homecoming. I need a three-day break from school.

Watched ISU-Oklahoma game at a bar at home. It's hard living in eastern "Hawkeye Country" Iowa. No one at the bar could figure out why we kept asking to turn up the volume of the TV. They just stared and laughed when we cheered for the Cyclones.

Had my first interview today. Hope it won't be my last. It's amazing how the word "interview" can bring on a severe case of sweaty palms. I thought some people were going to rub through their clothes if they dried their palms one more time.

I don't believe it. Someone in Carver Hall lost my change of degree program form. I've got to file another one under penalty of not graduating. Hope this one isn't lost.

Went to a Halloween Costume party. Guests were supposed to dress up, but of course hardly anyone did. Glad I brought a change of clothes. People were beginning to stare.

NOVEMBER

Signed up for an interview with IBM. I wonder if I'm supposed to dress like the IBM men in the commercials. I've got the dark suit, but no eyeglasses. The usual sweaty palms struck again.

The interview went terrible. I still can't figure out why they insisted on four copies of my resume. The interviewer only kept one, and the other three have "IBM" stamped all over them.

I'm not looking forward to Thanksgiving. The relatives will want a detailed account of my job search. Oh, I know they're just concerned. But sometimes people base a job search on engineering standards — lots of on-campus interviews.

Well, here's one person who didn't get to see Bruce Springsteen. Why couldn't the Boss be my last college concert? But no, I've got to listen to crazed fans tell me all about the fantastic, four-hour concert. If I saw the concert, I wouldn't gloat. I'm going to be sick if I hear "Born in the U.S.A." one more time.

DECEMBER

Just three weeks left. My last three weeks. How can I get all my classwork, Christmas shopping, and good-byes done in three weeks?

Went to a kamikaze party last night to commemorate Pearl Harbor Day. I'm going to miss all the creative Party ideas in college. Too bad they ran out of kamikazes before I got there. The closest I got to one was when someone spilled their drink on me.

Ordered my cap and gown today. I get to keep the cap and tassel, although I don't know what I'll do with them.

Picked up my graduation approval slip today. My change of degree program still hasn't made it through the red tape. It's getting awfully close to graduation. Hope they find it soon.

I have no finals! What will I do for a whole week? I guess I'll find some things to do for the last time. Maybe I'll make a list titled, "Things I've never done at ISU." I'm beginning to suspect my friends are tired of hearing about things I do for the last time. Just wait until they graduate. They'll understand then.

Picked up my cap and gown. Had to try them on as soon as I got home. Now I know how judges feel in their black robes.

I did it. I graduated. Oh, sure, the ceremony was long, but it was worth it. We even got to walk across the stage to receive our diplomas. I'd never been that close to President Parks before. In fact, I've hardly ever seen him. A couple of my friends clapped when I walked across the stage. That was against the rules, but I enjoyed it. After the ceremony, everyone wandered away with their parents. It wasn't the big good-bye scene like in high school. We left Hilton Coliseum for the last time — as students. Just think of all the things we will do for the first time — as graduates. At least I can stop using the word "last" for a while. — Dave Schuster

THE INCURABLE "DISEASE"

Far below: *Another Senioritis victim, Chris Hollinger spends a few minutes at her desk, trying to decide what "not to do." —Ed Cicenas

Laziness, apathy towards school, an excessive need to party and the onslaught of what has come to be called "senior clutch," or the overwhelming desire to get married, are all symptoms of a malady which affects many college students as they enter their final year of study: senioritis.

Like other diseases, senioritis affects a variety of students in different ways and to different degrees, depending upon the circumstances.

For some, like Steve Mortensen, a senior in mechanical engineering who still has a year left, senioritis has yet to affect him.

"Because I have so much to do yet, I haven't had time to get senioritis," Mortensen said. "Next semester though, I'll have most of my core classes completed and then I imagine I'll start getting lazy."

But for other students, however, senioritis has hit in full force.

"It's getting more and more difficult for me to get up in time to get to class," said Phil Lawler, a senior in animal science. "My attitude towards school has really gone down."

Kevin Neeson, a senior in computer engineering, is suffering similar symptoms.

"I don't even feel guilty if I miss class anymore. It's great," he said.

Senior clutch, or the urge to graduate and get married, is perhaps the most visible sign of the disease. Couples start making wedding plans even before they start making plans for getting a job after graduation. Some even get married before they have actually graduated. Kris Groepper, a senior in journalism, got married the summer before her senior year. Although she says things have worked out so far, she is apprehensive about graduation.

"Neither of us have a solid job offer yet," she said. "The prospect of being thrown into the world without a job is frightening."

Not all seniors experience senioritis. For some, senior year is just like any other year. For others, senior year is the last chance to kick back and relax, and to be a college student perhaps for the very last time.

Of course some students didn't mind, but for those with senior clutch, graduation meant a sad day in Ames.

Senior clutch was a fairly common affliction in mild forms but occasionally was very serious and eventually caused some students to advertise for a spouse in the newspaper. Since Iowa State attracts many farmers, a typical ad might have read . . . "Have clutch, please send your qualifications and picture of tractor to John at P.O. Box . . .

One senior in Farm Operation with a minor case of clutch said, "I always keep my eyes open." He said he never got as desperate as a lot of people did.

A December graduate in Ag Business said he was hoping to be married before he graduated but it looked as though he was going to have his hope deferred.

He said he knew of others who were hoping to find a spouse before graduation. "I know a lot of girls who would like to get married." However, he said some of those girls weren't for him because they weighed more than him and he had no intention of marrying someone who weighed that much.

Dave Rowe, Computer Engineering, said he hoped to get married someday, but not before he graduated. "I think it's encouraging to have somebody who would be your life-long companion."

Rowe explained why he wanted to wait to get married, "I feel I view marriage with a greater commitment than a lot of society."

Chris Hollinger, Home Economics-Journalism, said she thought about marriage, but had no plans to get married before she graduates in 1985. When asked why, Hollinger said, "I wouldn't have any time to plan a wedding!"

Hollinger said when she was a freshman, she considered marriage to be far into the future. "I made a vow I didn't want to get married before I graduated!"

When asked if she eventually wanted to get married, Hollinger said, "Oh, definitely . . . who doesn't?"

Personally, I have drawn one conclusion from writing this story, and that is . . . I should write more like it, after all, I now have two prospective husbands because of the interviews! I guess I won't need to worry about getting clutch when I'm a senior! —Sheila Streicher

ISU seniors Take it...

After spending a few years at ISU, most graduating seniors have unconsciously, if not consciously, formed opinions about their time at ISU. Although the negative opinions seem to be the first things students talk about when ask to voice their opinion, overall they do appreciate ISU.

"I really think ISU is an excellent school. If you want to, you can make your time here excellent too," said Julie Heise. However, she does feel ISU has too much "administrative red tape; I've never learned to stand in line so well," Heise added.

Mark Godfrey also thinks ISU has far too much red tape. He said, "I've toured Beardshear one too many times."

Godfrey, a former engineering student, says he really likes the Science and Humanities college much better than engineering. Specifically, he likes the English instructors. "They're fun," he said.

Anne Oakland doesn't feel she really got to know some of her instructors because of the large classes, especially in computer science.

Oakland, however, does enjoy having school so close to her home in Radcliffe, Iowa. She also says ISU has a reputation as a good school which may help her find a better job later.

From a more aesthetic viewpoint, Oakland and Audrey Heimindinger both feel that ISU's attractive campus made their time at ISU more interesting.

Heimindinger says that she likes ISU, but she doesn't know what other universities are like. Even though she thinks it's hard to get some classes and some classes are too large, she doesn't feel that she can complain since she doesn't have anything to compare it to.

Sarah Ulvog attended St. Olaf College in Northfield Minn. before attending ISU. Ulvog says that although she thinks ISU's out-of-state tuition is a downfall, it's less than St. Olaf.

She also added that she doesn't like ISU's policy of assistants for chemistry lab instructors. At St. Olaf, she said, the professors taught chemistry labs and that was more beneficial to her. However, she does think ISU has a good chemistry program.

Unlike many students at ISU, Terry Hotchkiss, thinks ISU's food service in the residence hall is a good deal. Hotchkiss, who is also a food service employee, thinks "people don't appreciate food service enough."

Hotchkiss also found ISU's intramural program to be a definite plus. He participated in about five or six intramurals per semester, he said.

Alan Gilbert thinks ISU has a good intramural program too. Gilbert, who's an R.A. in Knapp Hall, also appreciates ISU's dorm system.

Gilbert does wish though that ISU were still on the quarter system. He started out here with it and really liked it. "If you messed up a quarter, you had two more chances to make it up. Now, if you're bumped out of a class or something, you're a half-year behind," he said.

Gilbert, as an engineering student, also feels ISU should create more incentives for its professors. He feels ISU is losing some of its top engineering professors to commercial industry because it has more to offer. He fears too, that ISU's excellent engineering program may suffer in the future as a result.

These comments are just a few of the many opinions graduating seniors hold about ISU. Although they do point out a few flaws, overall, they have enjoyed the time they spent at ISU. — Sheila Streicher

Seniors

*Above: When asked their least favorite thing about ISU, these two seniors, Rob Monks and Kim Strudthoff were speechless. — Ed Cicenas

Top Right: Chris Hansen's favorite pastime at ISU hasn't been studying. He said "Partying on the terrace," is his favorite school subject. — Ed Cicenas

Right: Kerry Dague takes time out in front of the Memorial Union. "Hats off," Dague said. — Jennifer Neal

And you thought seniors were sane and studied all the time, right? Wrong! Seniors can be the craziest people around. And why shouldn't they be? After four long years of lines, dorm food, and the NoDoze helpers before exams, you would be too. Seniors can be found having just plain fun. Bomb '85 photographers have captured some of those moments throughout the senior section. — Jennifer Neal

Craziest Things

*Top: Where was Santa when these three senior reindeer showed up? Sue Shepler, Pete Wilson, and Beth Wilson have obviously found part-time work while they studied at ISU. — Dave Schuster
Left: Hello, Mouseketeer Club Headquarters, may I help you? Mathew Hermanson takes pride in his duties as head mouse. — Ed Cicenas
Right: As he searches for that special K.Q. answer, Jim Richey captures the solemn mood of another floor member. — Ed Cicenas

More Senior Craziness

Upper Left: The RA from Forbes House, Laura Shekleton, discusses social events with other floor members. Above: When asked if there was anything he could do over at ISU, Dave Heuton said "I wouldn't change anything!" — Ed Ciesnas

Index

Virtually every state sent students to Iowa State this year, as enrollment records were broken again last fall. More than 26,000 students attended ISU during 1984-85.

Not only did students come from all across the United States, but a number of foreign countries were represented in the student body, as well. More than 1,100 undergraduates were international students.

Although Iowa State is often regarded as a farmer's college with little culture, people with that attitude are quite mistaken. Ames had a diversified student body consisting of students from around the world, and a variety of backgrounds. And, as usual, each major had a representative from a number of places. It all happened in the course of a year. ◆

Reminiscing

Sit back and reminisce. Another year gone. Too soon past. Never long to last.

Friends. Challenges. Success. Failure. In the course of the year, we have gained experiences to last a lifetime. Blessed with the good experiences, victims of the bad. Every experience preparing us for tomorrow, and enter tomorrow with the determination, enthusiasm, hope, and knowledge gained from the past.

Sit back and reminisce. Times past. Gone Forever. Look to tomorrow with dreams in hand. Reminisce.

—Klint Locker

Colophon

Volume 92 of the Iowa State University Bomb was printed by Delmar Publishing Company of Charlotte, North Carolina. All printing was done using the offset lithography process. The 608-page book had a press run of 4,000 copies.

Base material for the metallay embossed cover is black with a whirlpool texture.

Endsheets are 65 pound cover weight with a gloss black and matte black finish. A number of headline types are used within the text, however the body type is Times Roman 10/11.

Senior portraits were taken by Yearbook Associates of Millers Falls, Massachusetts. Housing and organization photographs were taken by Jolesch Photography of Des Moines.

Bomb '85 encompasses the work of a number of people, other than staff members, who put in countless hours of work and dedication. Our appreciation and thanks go to the number of people who worked with us and supported us through their efforts this year.

Thanks

Among those that we would like to thank are: Frank Myers and Sherry Breneman of Delmar Publishing; Jim Williams and John Renaud of Yearbook Associates; Brent Olsen of Jolesch Photography; Chuck Walter of Jostens Yearbook Company; Gerald Schneider of Delma Photography.

Cal Floren and John Dugger represented us faithfully on the Bomb Publications Board, along with other board members Steve Waltens, Engineering; Mike Rooney, Education; Lucinda Stephenson, Graduate; Nancy Wilford, Agriculture; Dave Schuster, Sciences and Humanities and Lynne Bartholomew, Design.

Special thanks goes to the Iowa State Daily, support from the Ames Community and Lou Christensen, Bomb Office Manager. Without you we couldn't have done it.
