A CELEBRATION OF DIVERSITY

It's 1980, and with the new decade comes an abundance of new ideas, resolutions and goals. In compiling "the book" of the year, the 1980 BOMB staff has tried to take a positive approach to the direction in which our campus society appears to be moving.

The theme, "A Celebration of Diversity," expresses a goal addressing the differences in ideas, backgrounds and cultures at Iowa State with the belief that the differences compliment the group as a whole.

Iowa State University is a network in which a group of individuals may receive, react, respond and challenge the actions or views of another group.

The challenges voiced openly on campus provide students with vast opportunities for experience and insight into a world of ideas.

Possible solutions to the world's economic, foreign and domestic problems could be explored more intelligently if each reference group at Iowa State allowed one another an objective ear.

In piecing the puzzle to create a workable whole, all parts must be included. Our diversity on campus must be recognized and celebrated.

Looking back over the decade, we acknowledge positive change, recognize weaknesses and look forward to cooperation and a free flow of ideas in the 1980's. The recognition of differences — "A Celebration of Diversity."

Four students were killed at Kent State University in Ohio in 1970, as National Guardsmen fired M-1 rifles into a crowd of anti-war demonstrators and bystanders.

Violence flared at several other U.S. universities as student protest was aimed at the nation's military move into Cambodia.

President Richard M. Nixon later announced 40,000 United States troops would be pulled out of South Vietnam by Christmas.

Violence was also reported from outbreaks between Roman Catholics and Protestants in Northern Ireland.

Back home, disaster struck as one of the largest brush fires in California's history raged through mountain canyons near the Mexican border, forcing about 50,000 persons in nearby San Diego to flee their homes.

In Washington, the Senate voted 64 to 70 to lower the voting age to 18 for federal, state and local elections.

President Nixon signed a bill outlawing cigarette commercials on radio and television.

The 100th session of the peace talks between representatives of the United States and North Vietnam was held in Paris.

President Nixon announced a plan to increase the rate of U.S. troops withdrawing from South Vietnam.

At the same time, thousands of anti-war protesters were arrested in Washington, D.C., after they threatened to close down the capital by a massive civil disobedience protest.

Washington was also faced with internal problems as the New York Times began publication of a series of articles and documents based on a secret Pentagon study ordered by U.S. Secretary of Defense, Robert S. MacNamara, during the administration of President Lyndon B. Johnson.

In California, the longest trial in the state's history ended in Los Angeles with the conviction of Charles Manson and three of his followers on charges of first-degree murder.

An uprising by 1,200 inmates in Attica, New York, shocked the nation. The protest was quelled by nearly 1,500 state troopers, sheriff's deputies and prison guards. The final death toll was 43.

Environmentalists celebrated Earth Week in the spring of 1971. The nationwide observance was devoted to the environment to direct attention to environmental problems in the United States.

President Nixon's peace proposal was praised in 1972. The proposal called for a total cease-fire in Indochina, withdrawal of all U.S. and allied forces within six months of Hanoi's acceptance and a new presidential election for South Vietnam.

The proposal helped Nixon win re-election, by a landslide, to his second term in office.

In the sports world, the Winter Olympic Games opened in Sapporo, Japan. About 1,300 athletes from 35 countries competed.

Tragedy struck the summer Olympics of 1972. Arab terrorists, members of the Black September organization, slipped into the Olympic Village in Munich, West Germany and killed two members of the Israeli Olympic team and seized nine other hostages.

Later the same day, the hostages were killed at a military airport during a shoot-out between the terrorists and West German police and soldiers.

The Senate approved the Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Hawaii became the first state to ratify the amendment.

Florida became the first state to reinstitute the death penalty. Executions were halted as a result of a ruling by the United States Supreme Court.

Harry S. Truman, 33rd President of the United States, died.

In 1973, a cease-fire accord ending the Vietnam conflict was signed in Paris.

The agreement called for withdrawal of U.S. troops from South Vietnam, release of U.S. prisoners held in North Vietnam and a four-nation commission to supervise the truce.

The American people were getting their first taste of Watergate. The United States Senate, by a vote of 70 to 0, adopted a resolution establishing a seven-member select committee to probe the Watergate bugging case and other purported acts of political sabotage in the 1972 presidential election campaign.

Spiro T. Agnew, vice president of the United States, resigned. Agnew pleaded "no contest" to one count of income tax evasion.

Nixon named Congressman Gerald R. Ford (R., Mich.) as vice president.

About 200 armed supporters of the American Indian Movement seized the hamlet of Wounded Knee on the Ogalala Sioux Reservation in South Dakota and resisted efforts to evict them.

President Nixon ordered mandatory allocations of propane and distilled fuel supplies as part of a plan to avert an energy crisis in the United States.

Lyndon B. Johnson, 36th President of the United States, died after being struck by a heart attack at his ranch near Johnson City, Texas.

President Nixon resigned Aug. 9, 1974 and Gerald R. Ford took office. Ford, the first president not elected by the people, later pardoned Nixon.

The Boston busing plan stirred violence and boycotts at public schools in that city.

Patricia Hearst, granddaughter of the late newspaper publisher William Randolph Hearst, was kidnapped in Berkeley, Calif., by a group called the Symbionese Liberation Army. The group demanded food for the poor as partial ransom.

The eight Ohio National Guardsmen were acquitted of charges in connection with the 1970 Kent State shooting that killed four students.

The Alaska pipeline construction permit was issued by the U.S. Department of the Interior. Projects for the pipeline had been blocked by environmental lawsuits since 1970.

The Miami Dolphins football team won its second straight Super Bowl. They beat the Minnesota Vikings, 24 to 7.

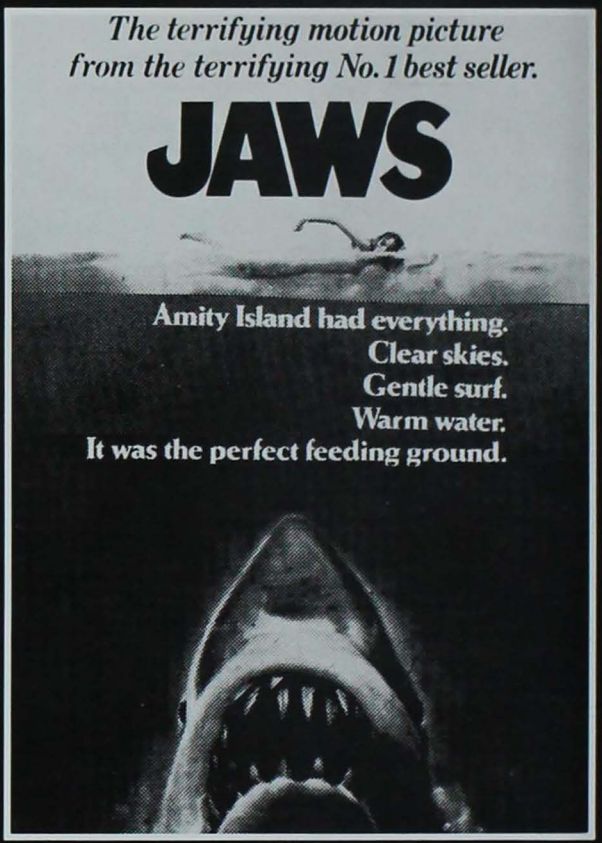
1975



The motion picture "Jaws" captured audiences across the nation. "Jaws," a movie about a killer shark that terrorized a New England town, triggered a flood of disaster movies.

President Ford refused to give aid to New York City. The Big Apple needed the money to pay off $1.5 billion worth of debts.

Later, federal aid in the form of a $2.3 billion loan was approved to help bail the city out.

The President's Council on Environmental Quality banned aerosol sprays propelled by fluorocarbons. The committee thought the aerosol sprays were destroying the earth's protective ozone shield.

James R. Hoffa, former international president of the Teamsters Union was reported missing by his family.

Rumors as to what happened to Hoffa made the news, but the labor leader wasn't found.

The U.S. celebrated its 200th birthday on July 4, 1976, with festivities throughout the land. An estimated six million people watched Operation Sail, an international flotilla of sailing ships, sail from New York Harbor up the Hudson River.

Democrat James Earl Carter, Jr. was elected President of the United States. Carter defeated incumbent Gerald Ford.

Chairman Mao Tse-tung died at 82. He had been the principal leader of the People's Republic of China since it was organized in 1949.

Long-time Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley died of a heart attack at age 74.

A major earthquake in Guatemala caused massive destruction and left an estimated 22,000 people dead.

The Winter Olympic Games were held at Innsbruck, Austria, with more than 1,000 athletes from 37 nations competing. The Summer Games were held in Montreal, Canada.

"One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" won best picture, best director, best actor and best actress Oscars.

$133 million was set aside by the federal government for mass immunization to guard against swine flu.

Condemned murderer Gary M. Gilmore, was shot by a firing squad at the Utah State Prison — at his request. Gilmore was the first person to be executed in the U.S. in ten years.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) banned the sweetener, saccharin. All foods containing saccharin had to be labeled to warn consumers about contents.

The New York Yankees won the World Series. The Yankees beat the Los Angeles Dodgers four games to two.

The television adaption of Alex Haley's novel, Roots, an eight night showing, caught the eye of 80 million viewers for its last segment. This was an all-time viewing record for a television program.

Fans worldwide grieved the death of Elvis Presley, 42, the first great American rock-and-roll star.

The "Son of Sam" saga ended when murderer David Berkowitz was caught. Six young people — five of them young women with brown hair — were killed before New York City's biggest manhunt ended.

U.S. farmers protested low farm prices in 1978. The American farmers — with their tractors — demonstrated in Washington, D.C., and in state capitals across the nation.

Many farmers let their fields lay fallow in attempts to get 100 percent imparity.

The U.S. Senate raised the mandatory retirement age from 65 to 70.

Woody Allen and Diane Keaton's, "Annie Hall" won an Oscar as the best picture of 1978. The movie also led the fashion world as Keaton's "Annie Hall" look swept the nation.

Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, (Dem., Minn.) died of cancer.

1980-2000

With every new decade comes hope for what the future will bring. The 1980's — like the 1970's — began as no exception to this rule.

As the 1970's ended, the American public found itself seeking strong leadership. With the 1980 presidential election on the horizon, and President Jimmy Carter losing the support of many former followers, numerous hopefuls emerged to challenge the man who had symbolized hope to so many.

Energy problems and proposed solutions were on the horizons as the 1980's began. With the supply of fossil fuels diminishing — as fuel demands rose — an increasing need for alternate sources became apparent. Nuclear energy was seen by many as the answer, while others emphasized the hazards and unknown dangers of nuclear energy sources. Solar, wind, and water-generated energy alternatives gained in popularity, but didn't get widespread acceptance.

A return to more conservative thinking was evident as the 1980's began. Anti-abortion and anti-ERA (Equal Rights Amendment) groups grew in strength, while some liberal factions waned. Whether or not a more conservative trend would emerge in the 1980 elections was a possibility some applauded as a return to basic values — while others saw conservatism as a threat to hard-fought gains.

Recession, international discord, unemployment, declining college enrollments, even the Iowa "Bottle Law" — everyone could find something wrong with the way the 1970's ended and the 1980's began. But a new beginning — and the accompanying new hopes — for the coming years were hardly diminished by the concerns. Though the 1970's were a turbulent, changing time, fundamental reforms in American life came about. The 1980's begin with the potential for further change.

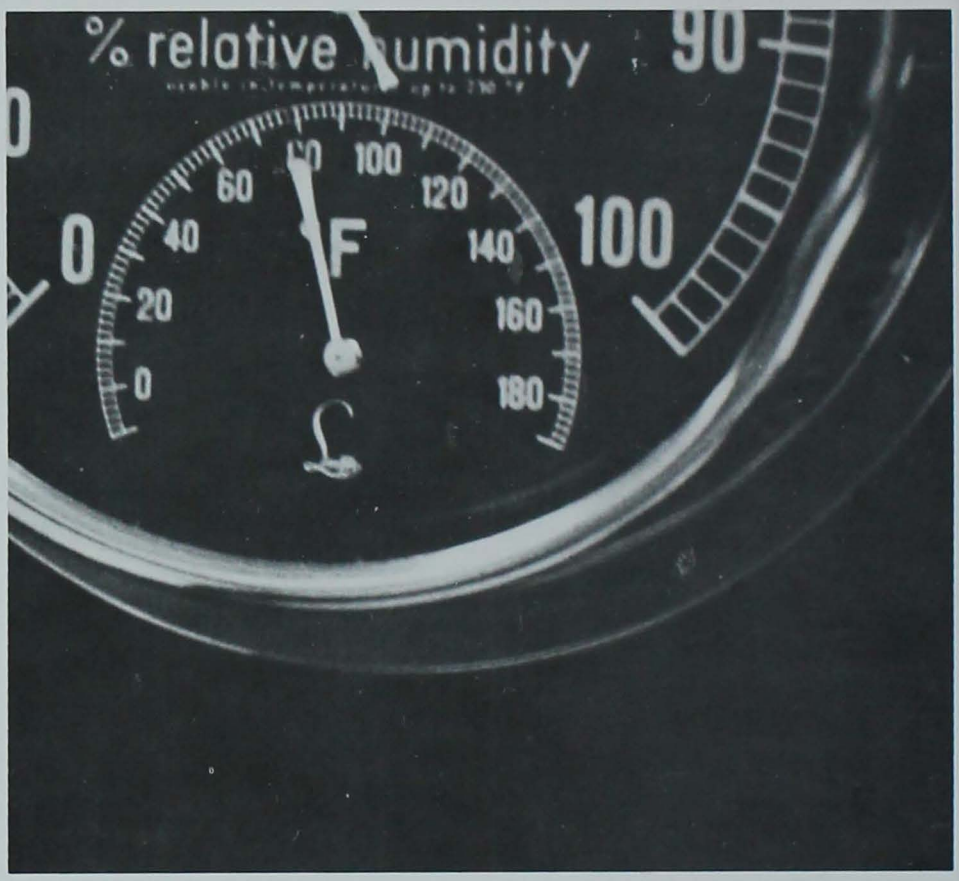
ENERGY



Higher prices and longer lines are becoming a way of life for most Americans.

In the early 70's the U.S. came head to head with a gas shortage.

Many Americans felt the shortage was a gimmick by the big oil industries to raise the price of gasoline and home heating oil.

Prices did go up and after the first few months the lines began to disappear.

Americans started buying smaller cars to counteract the increase in prices and to save gas.

As we moved into the later 70's, the prices of gasoline slowly rose.

However, Americans continued to use large quantities of oil products daily without any concern about running short.

Then in 1979 prices took a drastic trend upward.

Oil the U.S. was importing from foreign nations rose in price to supplement the increase the consumers were faced with. Once again the U.S. was faced with a shortage of petroleum products.

Gas supplies were cut back and many gas stations cut back on hours and limited each day's sales to stretch their supplies through the month.

In some states, like California, an odd-even gas rationing plan was instituted.

The plan called for alternate days when a consumer could buy gas. The days corresponded to the license plate number.

By the end of the summer gas prices had risen to over a dollar a gallon. This caused many station owners to switch to selling gas by the half-gallon because pumps couldn't register a three-digit number.

Besides gasoline, other petroleum products could become scarce and more expensive, including anti-freeze, motor oil and heating oil.

Americans were warned, if the weather got cold early in the fall of 1979, there might be a shortage of heating oil.

The warning caused many American home owners to install wood-burning fireplaces and stoves to heat their homes.

ENERGY

Imagine driving through a new housing development where each home has a solar heating and cooling system along with the familiar television antenna.

The growing number of solar buildings now under construction in this country is testimony to a gradual transition in new construction.

Fewer houses are now built with equal glass on four sides.

More homes face the sun and make maximum use of its heat.

With today's soaring utility rates and shortages, solar energy is a readily available source of relief.

This push to use solar energy to heat and cool our homes might help replace scarce fossil fuels and save money for the consumer.

A solar home can save up to half the normal fuel costs of a home.

The Midwest adapts to solar energy with greater ease than other parts of the country.

Iowa State University Research Foundation has set up an energy-efficient residential development in Ames.

The Laurent Hodges family built a passive solar heating home on the development sight.

The home, designed by David Block, uses concrete slabs to store heat.

Passive solar heating, with concrete, is better for Iowa weather.

Some passive solar heating systems use roof ponds to store the sun's energy but Iowa's cold winters would cause the water to freeze.

Hodges have received a grant from the state to keep statistics on the house.

The statistics will be used by the Iowa State University Research Foundation in its search for alternate energy sources for the future.

ENVIRONMENT

Environmentalists have been a part of the last decade. They have pushed for a clean and healthy society.

Over the past ten years environmentalists have restored America.

The Early 70's were times when Americans had over-stepped their impact on nature.

The air was reaching a dangerous degree with smog rolling out of factories and cars. Our water was showing signs of no return with many fish dying from factory waste and careless citizens.

In an effort to educate students at ISU, about environmental problems, an Environmental Action Committee was formed.

Members of the committee kept a close watch on environmental issues in the news and spent time writing legislators, making certain their concerns for the reestablishment and maintenance of environmental quality was known.

In the busy pace of the American life, many people stopped to listen. What they found was the noise level was high.

Because of government regulations the noise pollution has been brought under control.

Environmentalists are still battling against those who have little concern for nature.

In the future, Americans will be faced with the conservation of the land and environment and how far to push progress and new energy sources and yet save the earth.

ENVIRONMENT

The bottle bill law went into effect July 1, 1979, requiring deposits on all canned and bottled beverages sold in Iowa.

All refillable containers labelled "Iowa Refund five cents" require the deposit.

The bill hit consumers with an increase in the cost of canned and bottled beverages. Most products went up at least five cents. Many vending machines raised their prices by ten cents or more.

The five cent deposit fee is the minimum amount retailers may charge. They may charge more.

Retailers were hit with the task of storing the returned cans and bottles until pickup. Problems rose because the containers were returned damaged or dirty.

Stores also found the empty bottles and cans drew roaches and insects.

Environmentalists praised the bill. One of the purposes for it was to help eliminate cans and bottles thrown by the wayside.

The law also supplements recycling. The returned containers are washed and used again.

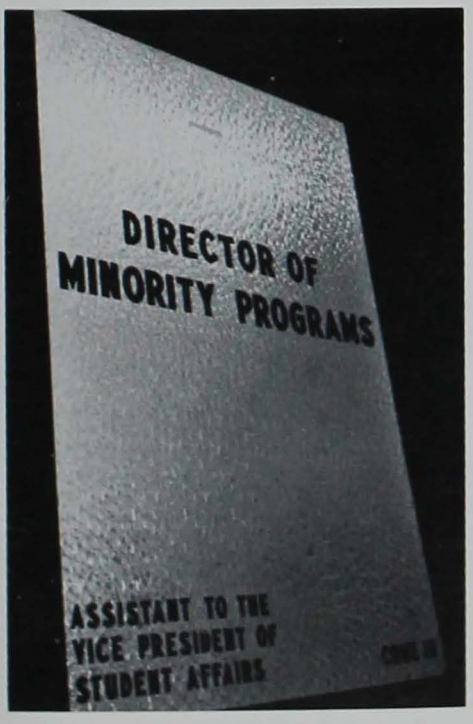
ENROLLMENT



Iowa State has seen a growth in enrollment. This increase has caused student life to change.

Many students have moved off campus due to the over crowding in the dormitories. Other students live in temporary housing until rooms open.

The increase has brought minority students to ISU. The Office of Student Life has more minority student organizations than ever before.

The increase in students has also caused an increase in available parking space. The Memorial Union added a parking ramp. However, the demand for parking spaces still exceeds the amount of available parking.

Students are not the only people coping with the increase. Classrooms are overcrowded and teachers and advisors are having to handle more students each year.

During scheduling the University staff and administration have to process more students. This causes confusion and frustration for all people involved.

Parking has become a problem at ISU since enrollment figures started going up, opposite page. Craig Trumbo

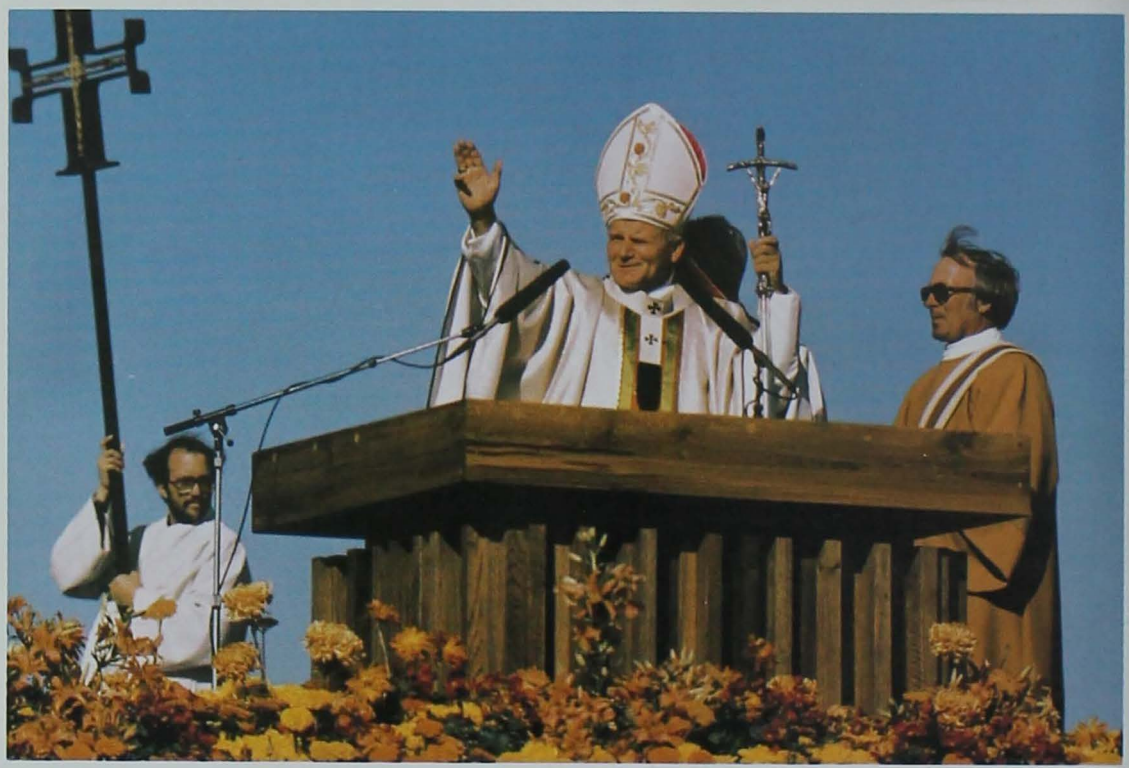
POPE'S IOWA VISIT IS LIVING HISTORY



Des Moines, Iowa. October 4, 1979

When the sun began to rise over Living History Farms, the sound system by the hilltop altar played "Oh, What a Beautiful Morning." Already more than 100,000 people had gathered on the hillside awaiting the arrival of Pope John Paul II, who was to celebrate Mass in Des Moines as part of his American visit. Many had been on the hill all night, camping out in weather much colder and windier than the predicted balmy autumn day.

Some people came out of curiosity, to get a glimpse of the man whom one newspaper columnist called "the first sexy pope." For others, this was a once-in-a-lifetime religious experience; never before had a pontiff come to Iowa to bless the people of rural America.

They came from miles around — Des Moines residents carrying lawn chairs and picnic baskets; a busload of high school students from Kansas; an entourage from Holy Name Seminary in Wisconsin; a girl from Idaho who had hitchhiked to Iowa carrying a box of religious medals for the pope to bless.

When the Holy Father's helicopter, "Angel One," landed at Living History Farms at 2:30 p.m., there were approximately 350,000 people there to greet him. Earlier, the pope's plane had landed at the Des Moines Municipal Airport one hour and fifteen minutes behind schedule, and the pope was greeted by a sparse crowd. From there he went to Cumming, where he celebrated Mass at tiny St. Patrick's Church there.

At Living History Farms, it was a hushed awed crowd that greeted Pope John Paul II. He stood beneath a multi-colored banner depicting the four-leafed logo of the Des Moines papal visit and spoke to the masses about reverence for the land.

"The land is not only God's gift; it is also man's responsibility," he said in deliberate English, "Man, himself created from the dust of the earth, was made its master."

Much of the pope's homily was directed to farmers, and he began by telling them, "The church highly esteems your work." He urged farmers to adopt attitudes of gratitude, conservation and generosity.

"You who are farmers today are stewards of a gift from God which was intended for all humanity. You have the potential to provide food for the millions who have nothing to eat and thus help rid the world of famine."

After his address, the pope distributed the Eucharist to 160 persons who had been selected prior to the visit. Some crowd members also received communion from the 250 priests and deacons who circulated through the crushing throngs.

In the crowd were women protesting the fact that no women were allowed to serve communion with the pope. Some of them wore yellow armbands which said, "Equal Rite's."

Following the papal blessing — given in Latin — the pope walked near the fence separating him from the crowd. He kissed a baby, touched a few hands, then stood on a podium and waved at the people who shouted, "Long live the pope!"

Within ten minutes of the pope's departure, the farms were deserted. As the people left, they were offered myriad souvenirs of the papal visit — T-shirts, buttons, a commemorative program, a special edition the Des Moines Tribune.

But perhaps the best souvenir of the papal visit — for Catholics and non-Catholics alike — was the joyous, positive feeling conveyed by the winsome and charismatic John Paul II. Not only did he urge people to love the land and each other; he caused them to believe they could do it.

FIREWORKS FRISBEES AND FOLLIES

The theme for the Veishea 1979 parade was "Family Features" and included 17 floats. Tau Kappa Epsilon/Chi Omega won the large float division with their entry "Stone Age Style" featuring the Flintstones. Other winners were Delta Upsilon/Sigma Kappa, medium division, Sigma Phi Epsilon/Gamma Phi Beta, small division. Matt Blair was the parade marshall.

Other activities featured were canoe races on Lake LaVerne, frisbee football, campus tours, open houses in different departments and Veishea Follies, a take off of Superstars. George Plimpton also gave a speech on central campus.

Several plays were put on in conjunction with Veishea. The ISU Players performed Sing a Son of Sixpence. Stars Over Veishea produced South Pacific and the Union Board theatre put on Berlin to Broadway.

In March, it was just a drawing on a piece of paper with the details tucked away in the designer's head. Three weeks before Easter it showed signs of some definite form, but still lacked any distinguishable characteristics. It wasn't until 4:30 on the morning of the Veishea parade that the Pi Kappa Alpha-Alpha Delta Pi structure could be considered a float — complete with specific details and moving characters.

The float — "A Family of Fairy Tale Classics" — won the Parade Marshall Award in the 1979 Veishea celebration. The theme of the parade was "Family Features."

Gus Soteropulos, one of the four chairmen for the 1979 float, said the planning and organization began during winter quarter.

"Our fraternity has a reputation of being the first to start and the last to finish," said Soteropulos.

Soteropulos said a group of men and women from the fraternity and sorority got together after Christmas and brainstormed for suggestions and ideas. The four float chairmen made the final decisions regarding basic structure and theme of the 1979 float.

Soterpulos said, "The plans were drawn up in March by a fraternity member majoring in architecture. The architect and a group of fraternity members interested in carpentry work made the plans for building and operating the float."

The four chairmen managed the specific responsibilities of the float including construction, advertising and materials.

Although the Pi Kappa Alpha-Alpha Delta Pi float did not win first place in its division, Soteropulos said "Veishea is a chance to let the rest of the university and the public enjoy something you've put a lot of work into."

Fairy Tale Float: Concept to Reality

"Hitch Your Wagon to a Star" was the theme of the 1979 Greek Week. Three thousand members of fraternities and sororities observed a week of different activities April 2-6.

Greek Week began with a torch-light parade and awards show. A blood drive continued through the week.

The College Bowl was held on both Tuesday and Thursday nights of Greek Week. Contestants from different houses answered triva questions. Speed, as well as correct answers, enabled a team to win eliminating rounds and advance to the finals.

A vespers service was held for the purpose of unifying members in the Greek system.

Saturday morning there was a convocation for high school seniors who visited the campus and Greek houses during the week.

Friday and Saturday evenings, the seniors joined in the celebration by attending the house parties and street dances sponsored by various Greek houses. The Sigma Alpha Epsilon (SAE) fraternity combined a Mexican theme with Greek Week. This was apparent by their sign, "We welcome senioritas and seniors."

House parents and cooks of fraternities and sororities were honored at an open house held at the SAE fraternity on Friday, April 5.

The Greek Olympics highlighted the week on Saturday, April 6. A stilts relay, the bed race and the obstacle course remained time honored traditional events in the Olympics. Also, a new event was also added in 1979. The greased pig kept sorority representatives busy as each tried to be the first to grab the animal and win.

Dorm-Life Highlighted

High school seniors got a chance to "take a peek" at residence hall life during 1979 Residence Hall Week activities Mar. 11-17. The week of activities included a talent show, backgammon tournament, college bowl contest and novelty intramurals.

The ISU College Bowl Competition, which ran from Mar. 12-14, answered those questions which are on everyone's lips. For example: "What is the name of the oldest son on the television series, My Three Sons?"

Twenty-one teams — with four members each — from nineteen residence hall houses competed for the title. The questions ranged from television and movie trivia to chemistry formulas. In the finals, Lincoln House of Friley Hall won.

"Wild and Crazy Night" Mar. 15 gave dorm residents a chance to show talent of a more entertaining sort. Judges for this event were GBS president Fred Schuster, assistant football coach Gerald O'Dell and Miss Teenage Des Moines, Anne Paxton.

Winner of the talent competition was Lori Lehman of Nelson House in Westgate Hall.

Among the more wild and crazy acts of the competition was Murphy House in Friley Hall, with their rendition of "The Twelve Quarters of College." This rendition of "The Twelve Days of Christmas" featured misery in the fifth quarter of college — instead of golden rings. Cy the Cyclone made a special appearance, and impressed the crowd with his disco dancing style.

Novelty intramurals Saturday morning, Mar. 16, pitted co-ed teams against each other in unusual events. Dodds-Pennell of Friley Hall won the overall competition.

A Saturday night dance in the Memorial Union gave seniors their last "peek" at ISU in 1979's RHW.

"I thought the goal was set too high to reach," Paul Ament FN 2, said. "I thought we were doing great last year when we raised $61,000. I never dreamed we'd make over that amount this year."

The 1979 Muscular Dystrophy Dance Marathon raised last year by over $19,000 and went over the 1979 goal of $70,000.

Of the total $80,239, the "Hot Pepper Dance Company" raised over $5,000 in pledges. The group from Helser was awarded a trophy, pizza party and "Friday afternoon club." In the couples category, Dave Collins, I Ad 3, and Joan Miller, El Ed 4, raised over $23,000 in pledges. The two were awarded an all-expense-paid-trip to Worlds of Fun in Kansas City, Mo.

The March 23-24 marathon in Hilton Coliseum started at 6 p.m. Friday and ran through midnight Saturday. Over 700 couples registered to participate in the marathon.

Ten bands from the Ames area provided live music. Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia, a group made up of ISU band members, played the "big band sound" of the 1940s. Disc jockeys from KMGK radio station in Des Moines, played records from the '50s, '60s and '70s. Disco, rock, instrumental, jazz and blue-grass rhythms were alternated during the course of the marathon. The assortment of live bands, and disc jockeys provided a wide variety of music for the marathon participants.

Guest emcees, a Blues Brothers imitation contest, Duane Elliot and Floppy and lots of swallowed goldfish kept the participants going. A celebrity auction — which included an autographed basketball from the Cyclone men cagers, books from celebrities and a t-shirt from Iowa State Daily columnist Jane McClure — added to the fun, as well as to the money collected.

Money raised at the Annual marathon is sent to the muscular dystrophy offices in Des Moines and is used for programs, patient services and research in and around Iowa.

Tom Hayden and Jane Fonda brought their Campaign for Economic Development to Ames Oct. 21 as part of the Women's Week program for 1979.

They discussed current economic problems; Hayden focusing on energy and Fonda concentrating on women's role in the economic structure.

"The problem," Hayden said, "is that people in this country don't know how to look corporate leaders in the eye and say, 'You're killing people'."

Hayden, chairperson for the Campaign for Economic Development (CED), said the CED is a framework in which to discuss economic problems. "We have a set of problems that only seem to be able to be solved by creating a new set of problems," he said.

"Our generation is living through the end of the fossil fuels," Hayden said. As the price of these fuels goes higher it hurts the country's economic future, he said.

"We are told we can solve the energy problems by creating an inflation problem," Hayden said. "We need a depression or at least a permanent recession to wring out the economy."

The people hurt most by this attitude are women, minorities and those with fixed incomes, he said. It is the corporations and their leaders who decide on these policies and it is also they who are leaving whole regions of the country uninhabitable, Hayden said.

The United States needs to "bring the whole economic engine under new controls — human standards, moral standards and economic standards," he said.

The first step is moving towards an economy where humans count, Hayden said. "People who wrest control of the energy policy away from big business and big government can put it in regions and locales away from the oil cartel so people can have some voice in the way they want the energy to go," Hayden said.

Women's Week Features Jane Fonda, Tom Hayden

The present economy is one where the utility price structure makes waste profitable, he said. Hayden cited the decrease in consumption of utilities by Los Angeles residents as an example. In 1979 they were ordered to cut the use of all utilities or stiff penalties would be implemented, he said. But when they decreased consumption by 25 percent, the company increased their rates.

Hayden backs solar energy as a means to solve some of the current economic problem. It would create 400,000 jobs a year through the 80's. Hayden also believes tax dollars should be invested into the development of solar energy because it is nonpolluting.

"We don't think nuclear energy has a future in America," he said. Hayden also said the CED knows the present plants cannot be "phased out until we can phase in an alternative source of energy."

Fonda, winner of two Academy Awards, focused her speech on women. She said women are fighting for an economic democracy just as much as men. "I'm seeing what I've always known to be true — women play a very unique role."

"I see us beginning to make our concerns and our conscienceness felt," Fonda said. "I've always felt we were not saying to men to move over and give us a piece of the pie. I think the pie stinks. The pie lays men off, sterilizes them and sends them to fight wars."

"I don't think men have it so good. We want a better pie not only for ourselves but for men as well. When we fight for the Equal Amendment, we also fight for economic democracy so the burden will not fall on the backs of men.

Women's Week also included workshops, lectures and films on topics of particular interest to women. Sexual harassment on the job and breastfeeding on the job were two such subjects. Women's Week ran from Oct. 21-26.

King: Human Rights have advanced

Human rights today are better than they were 10 years ago, but they still have some distance to go in today's society, Coretta Scott King said. King, widow of civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr., spoke to a crowd of about 2,500 at C.Y. Stevens auditorium on Oct. 31, 1979.

King, one of this country's 100 most influential black people, said human rights have advanced beyond segregated school buses, lunch counter protests and voter's rights in this country since her husband's death, April 4, 1968.

Now society is at the stage in which "we are concerned with economic impowerment of those who have been left out of the system," King said.

Besides economic rights, King also included civil rights and political rights in a definition of human rights.

King discussed student's roles in human rights achievement. "I don't believe today's students aren't committed and have no concern for social problems. The challenges of today are more complicated than those of the 1960's and require more knowledge and education," King said.

"But there is a reservoir of knowledge and preparation in the students of today. The challenge of human rights is one that students are willing to accept," she said.

King offered a portion of her husband's sermon, "The Drum Major Instinct," as advice to students. Get out in front and lead the parade by serving God and not by grabbing the limelight. With this service to God, you may become great, she said.

"You don't need a college education to serve. You only need a heart full of grace, a soul generated by love and you can be that servant. That is my challenge to you, in the words of Martin Luther King," King said.

CY "DUNCAN" THE SOONERS

When speaking of 1979's Migration, you might say that most ISU birds chose to stay in their northern nests.

Migration, or Cy "Duncan" the Sooners, an annual trip to a conference football game, was held at Oklahoma University, Oct. 27, 1979. Only about a dozen students traveled to Norman, Okla., for Migration. The trip was sponsored by Migration Central Committee and Pep Council.

Co-chairperson of the committee, Dave Vaghn said, "about 100 other students went down on their own, providing their own accommodations."

Because of the limited interest in the 600-mile trip to Norman, original arrangements had to be altered, Rex Holland, committee business manager, said. Instead of buses, the group used a GSB (Government of the Student Body) van to travel in.

Vaughn blames the low interest on increased transportation costs and the lack of a "dynamite team." "We had to cater to the partying aspect of the trip instead of the football aspect," he said. A $100 weekend of partying — the cost of the trip — is too much for most students, he said.

Colorado Migration gets a better response from students because there's more to see, Vaughn said. They can ski besides going to the game, he said.

Despite the 38-9 loss to the Sooners, the few ISU fans partied after the game with Oklahoma fans at the "Jocky Strap," a Norman bar that offered specials to Cyclone migrators.

HAYES:
"Seeking friendships is a two-way street"

Former Ohio State football coach, Woody Hayes was the keynote speaker Friday, March 30 at the Student American Veterinary Medical Association (SAVMA) Educational Symposium. Hayes spoke in Hilton Coliseum to about 2,000 veterinary students, faculty and guests from the 22 veterinary colleges across the United States.

This was the seventh year of the symposium. The theme, "100 Years and Still Learning," referred to the 100th anniversary of ISU'S College of Veterinary Medicine. (ISU has the oldest veterinary college in the U.S.)

Hayes focused on the importance of friends. He also talked about his late brother, Issac, who came to ISU for graduate study in veterinary medicine.

"Seeking friendships is a two-way street. If you want to receive, you have to give. This life is not any easy one. We all need friends to carry us through some of life's dark passages," said Hayes.

"No man ever lived who had more honest-to-goodness friends than my brother, Ike, and no man ever enjoyed or was more proud of his profession," Hayes said.

Hayes said the stress on grade point, currently used to qualify students for veterinary medicine training, would have kept his brother from studying veterinary medicine.

"I think the educators of today are taking the easy way out. It isn't a good grade point that makes a man. It's guts." Hayes said.

Hayes said as a football coach he learned to compare society to a football game. Hayes said football teaches a person how to get up and try again after a failure and to realize success is a result of working together.

Leap Into Campus Chest

Students attempt to break the world-record lapsitting on Central Campus. The event was sponsored by Campus Chest. Barb Hull

An attempt to break the world record lapsitting opened the week of annual Campus Chest activities. About 500 students met on central campus Sunday, Sept. 22 to form a continuous circle of lapsitters. Over 3590 people were needed to break the mark in the Guinness Book of World Records. Susan Steinbrenner, a member of the Campus Chest Central Committee, said on a WOI newscast that the event turned out to be probably the largest game of leapfrog held at ISU.

Campus Chest lasted through Sept. 30.

KCCQ sponsored a celebrity auction Tuesday, Sept. 24. Assorted memorabilia donated by celebrities was auctioned off. Mamie Eisenhower's earrings, Bob Hope's keychain and autographed pictures of John Travolta and Elizabeth Taylor were included as fund raisers for the project.

Plant and candy sales were held at the Memorial Union throughout the week. A volleyball tournament's entry fees also were part of the funds raised.

Septemberfest and Bar night were held at Grandaddy's on Wednesday of Campus Chest Week. Septemberfest was a new addition to the traditional events and was not well attended. About 15 people showed up for the would-be bonfire and BBQ. The fest was designed to accommodate under-age participants.

Bar night featured a beer chug and a dance contest. Shuttle bus service from campus to Granddaddy's was provided.

Proceeds of Campus Chest went to 14 different charities such as ISU Speech and Hearing Clinic, American Cancer Society, Handicapped Students Organization and Open Line. Open Line received 10 percent of the proceeds.

A $15-per-plate dinner with Donald Kaul, a Des Moines Register's columnist was cancelled due to lack of interest.

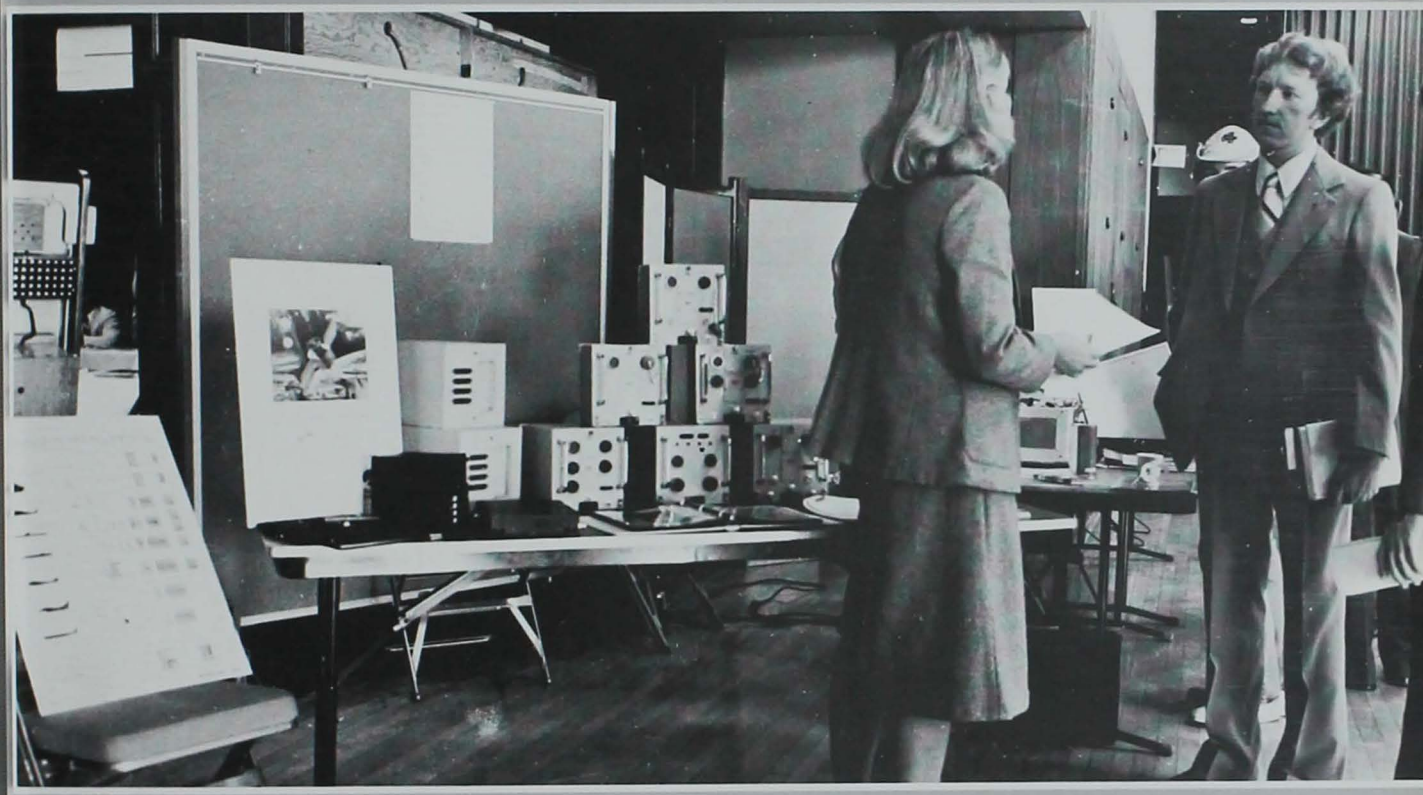
Eggs Drop for Engineer's Week



The egg-drop contest highlighted Engineer's Week. The annual event was held Oct. 1-5.

A raw egg protected by puffed wheat cereal survived a drop from the top of Marston Hall. Cindy Stout, ME 2, creator of the device, won first place in the contest. Other methods for prevention of breakage included shaving cream in a tube and marshmallows in a plastic bag.

The Order-Of-The-Ring ceremony was held Wednesday. This is a society of registered professional engineers and is symbolized with a sterling silver ring, according to Dr. Paul Morgan, associate dean of the college of engineering. The ring is worn on the "working hand" to remind engineers of ethics they must comply to, Morgan said. The ceremony was held so that students would be aware of the organization and its standards.

Industrial displays at the Union and an award's banquet were also included in the week's activities.

Celebrate Homecoming With Cy

"I'm a Cyclone, He's a Cyclone, wouldn't you like to be a Cyclone too!" Pledges of TKE and KKG tried to persuade the Jayhawk to join the Cyclones to the tune of a popular Dr. Pepper commercial. The group won first place in the Yell Like Hell finals held Homecoming Week on central campus.

Homecoming 1979, Celebrate with Cy, was held the week of Oct. 15-20.

"Jayhawk victory? In Never-never land?" The caption proved false, but SAE and Delta Delta Delta took first place in the small division of the lawn display contest with a Peter Pan theme. TKE and KKG won the large division with their mechanical and audio display featuring Cy and the Muppets. Kappa Sigma won the banner competition with their version of Atlas, the mythological character that holds up the world. Cy played the hero's role.

Beyer House in Welch Hall proposed a lawn display which was rejected in competition. The theme was "Fly High With Cy," and was deemed unrepresentative (of ISU) subject matter by the Homecoming 1979 committee. The dispute over the Beyer display proposal was because the display resembled a water pipe used for smoking marijuana.

Mass campaniling offered its traditional appeal on Thursday night. About 100 couples participated in the third annual midnight event.

The pushball finals were held on central campus on Friday. Harriman and Barker Houses took first place in the event, for the second straight year.

Despite the defeat on the gridiron by the Kansas Jayhawks, Saturday night was festive. Alumni and parents gathered with students at Greek open houses, dorm tours and campus visits while stirring memories of Iowa State years ago.

Students Protest Iranian Action

Banners and chants were reminiscent of the anti-Vietnam demonstrations in the late 1960's. But this time, Nov. 9, 1979, 1,500 ISU students were protesting against Iranian students who were holding over 60 Americans hostage at the U.S. Embassy in Iran.

The students in Iran were demanding the return of the deposed Shah of Iran. The Shah came to the U.S. in October for cancer treatments. The embassy was stormed Nov. 4.

The gathering was the largest demonstration at ISU since 1969.

Earlier in the week, WOI news stated ISU students were too concerned about finals to pay much attention to the Iranian situation. Prior to the demonstration public protest was limited to painting on the sidewalk reading "Iranians Go Home."

"Trade Khomeini backers for American hostages," read one sign on the steps of Curtiss. Later as the march progressed to Beardshear, demonstration leaders took turns shouting such slogans as, "Khomeini's a barbarian," and "Release our brothers."

An Iranian's car was vandalized by the protesters as he attempted to drive through the march after the protest moved to Lincoln Way.

Following the march, a question-answer session was held in the Pioneer Room of the Memorial Union. Members of the Iranian Student Association, (ISA), answered students' questions in an attempt for both sides to understand the other's view, according to GSB president Elizabeth Buck.

Mohammad Ghaffarzadeh, president of the ISA, stressed the importance of the Shah's standing trial in Iran and called the exiled monarch a "murderer." But, Ghaffarzadeh added, the ISA did not agree with the method used in Iran to gain the Shah's return. The ISA represents 45 of the over 200 Iranian students at ISU.

The lounge floors were littered with almanacs, encyclopedias and trivia books. Empty paper cups from Hardee's added to the clutter.

The 1979 Kaleidoquiz, KQ, inspired such scenes on ISU residence hall floors Nov. 31-Dec. 1.

Sixty-seven dorm floor teams participated in the 26-hour quiz show, sponsored by the student radio station KPGY. A team of phone-answering volunteers received the teams' answers to trivia questions asked by KPGY D.J.'s.

Various time limits were imposed on the 170 questions asked. Six minutes were allotted the question, "What is the highest degree earned by Charles Frederiksen, director of residence?" The answer was only a phone call away. "Hello, is Mr. Frederiksen there?"

Other questions, such as "What is the distance between the steps of Curtiss to the steps of Beardshear?" required more time to answer.

The Lange-Tappan team took first place in the trivia contest, with 63% of their answers correct. Last year's first place team answered 92% correctly, according to Dave Robson, co-chairperson of KQ. Harder questions were asked in 1979, Robson said.

Bennett-Anthony and Hutton-Lincoln tied for second place. No third place was awarded because of the tie. This was due to a technicality in the wording of a question. "What town in the U.S. has both a Marine Corps airbase and an Army testing facility?" was originally asked. Some seconds later, the D.J. asked the state also be specified. After discussion, the KQ co-chairpersons chose to tie the two groups, after protests on the addition of "state" to the question.

Other winning teams were, in order of finish: Schmidt-Lorch-Russell, Shilling-Converse, Tilden-Norman, Davidson-Lowe, Merrill-King, Bishop-Brown and Pearson-O'Bryan.

Bruce Young and Rick Hodson also served as KQ co-chairpersons.

In a word — energetic! That's Eubie! the black Broadway musical which came to ISU in Fall, '79.

Colorful costumes, fast-paced dancing and incredible singing all combined to make Eubie! a success.

At the beginning the audience was alone with the band as it whaled away Eubie Blake's music of the 1920's. Now the theater is black. A cute almost fragile tune begins to play, and as if sneaking up on the audience, the lights reveal three players in bright costumes portraying mechanical dolls. Their jerky, yet precise puppet-like movements seemed to put the audience in a trance.

But the dream-like pace did not last very long. The pace quickened considerably with "Shuffle Along," the title song of Eubie!, and Broadway's first all-black Broadway show.

In keeping with the high-stepping was the old favorite tune "I'm Just Wild About Harry." Roderick Sibert, a pudgy man with a devilish moustache, served as comic relief. His solo, "I'm Just A Great Big Baby" was not only suited to him but was packed with acrobatics that men his size don't usually do.

Even though Sibert served as a major comedian, he wasn't the only one who got laughs.

In the song, "There's a Million Little Cupids in the Sky," the stage was decked in Valentine red, as were the performers. The group sasheyed across stage as they sang with satirical facial expressions.

The audience roared as the song went from verse to chorus. Before they could sing "There's a million little cupids in the sky," an oversized backdrop fell from above. It was covered with gaudy little cupids.

Besides high-steppin' and comedy, the show had several bluesy songs. One, sung by Tony Franklin, was especially moving. His "Low Down Blues" was characteristic of the '20s. But the song didn't climax until Marva Hicks shared the stage with Franklin as she sang "Gee I Wish I Had Someone To Rock Me in the Cradle of Love." The two songs combined for a spectacular and very emotional duet.

During the finale, a reprise of "I'm Just Wild About Harry," a faint tune broke through the loud music. Three players walked mechanically to stage center like animated robots. As they moved, the lights faded — a classic ending to a phenomenal show.

"Kansas" Comes to Iowa

It was a rocking, enthusiastic crowd that welcomed the group Kansas to Hilton Coliseum Oct. 7, 1979.

The show opened with smoke rolling across the stage out into the audience. The theatrical tricks never ceased as the audience was entertained with green lasers, a movable backdrop and stage — and a dummy falling from the rafters.

Kansas was led by vocalist Steve Walsh. His enthusiasm for performing was reflected as he attacked the keyboards, bells, and bongos with sidestepping leaps and kicks.

Robby Steinhardt, violinist and vocalist, held the group together with his perfective violin playing and monologue. The band pleased the audience with songs from their recent album, Monolith, along with numbers from the past.

The only time the group was greeted by silence was when Walsh confused Hawkeyes with Cyclones, and congratulates ISU for a football win the day before (on Oct. 6, ISU lost to Pacific).

The current hit "People of the South Wind," brought the crowd to its feet, as did many other tunes in the hour-and-a-half performance.

From its past file of songs, the band played "Point of Know Return," "Portrait," and a crowd favorite, "Dust in the Wind."

The audience was rewarded with two encores. Kansas responded with hope of a return concert next year and ended with "Carry On."

"No Sex Please, We're British"

October 18, 1979 was opening night for the ISU Theatre's performance of "No Sex Please, We're British" — a hilarious comedy by Anthony Marriott and Alistair Foot.

The play is set in an apartment over a sub-branch of the National United Bank in Royal Windsor, England. The story opens with a pair of newlyweds, Peter and Frances Hunter, kissing in the kitchen. Peter is the bank's manager and is late for work. Frances is reluctant to have Peter leave, but has already tried solving her loneliness by ordering a home money-making kit advertized in the back of a magazine. The package arrives that day and Frances tries to hide her little package from Peter, hoping to make her enterprising idea a surprise. It becomes a real surprise though when the package turns out to be full of pornographic pictures, not glassware. And when off-color films, books, and a couple of ladies-of-the-evening arrive at the Hunter's door, the plot becomes a frantically funny attempt to hide the pornography from Peter's visiting mother, the district manager, and a bank inspector.

Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic

From the opening fanfare of Schumann's First Symphony through the climactic movement of Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony, the New York Philharmonic Orchestra's concert in Hilton Coliseum June 11 was characterized by contrasts.

The Schumann work was subtitled "Spring," and the third movement presented some good examples of why. Alternately dark and stormy, then bright and carefree, it effectively captured the contrasting moods of that season.

In the Shostakovich Symphony, stirring contrasts were created as subdued, pastoral strains grew into thunderous passages with the entire orchestra playing full volume.

Leonard Bernstein's fiery conducting was largely responsible for creating the intensity among the musicians which produced the professional performance. Watching him conduct was almost as enjoyable as concentrating on the music.

The Guthrie Theatre requests the honor of your presence at "Marriage"

Acting was hardly confined to the stage when the Guthrie Theater Company of Minneapolis presented Nikolai Gogol's "Marriage," at C. Y. Spephens Auditorium Mar. 30 and 31. The unrestrained action of "Marriage" had actors racing through the audience, climbing the light housings in the walls, dragging one another by the feet across the stage and up and down stairs, and even drawing members of the audience into the action.

Young actors and actresses from Ames were a part of "Marriage," as area children were cast to appear in a dream sequence of the production. The Guthrie Company used children in the cities where "Marriage" was staged, because it wasn't feasible for children to tour with the company.

The comedy centers on a hesitant bachelor who is "sick to death" of living amidst filth, insolence, and irresponsible servants. He considers marriage as a possible salvation and is led into all kinds of odd and comically confusing circumstances. The mixed emotions of the leading characters pull the audience into the "laughter through tears" phenomenon for which Gogol is particularly noted.

The scene of the play was competently portrayed by the actors somewhere in Russia in 1833 as they present Gogol's psychology.

Gogol's philosophy assumes the audience will identify with a situation if it is presented honestly. The cautious bachelor comes to a realization, and his feelings find an echo in each spectator as they, too, have come to such realization about life. By these means Gogol manages to turn the commonplace into a shocking world all its own.

Under the direction of Anatoly Efros, a guest director from Russia, "Marriage" deals bluntly with the most miserable aspects of human nature, insolence, greed, and selfishness. But as for "Marriage" being a comedy, Efros simply states, "Why not? It goes without saying . . ."

"Sing a Song of Sixpence" had premiered all over the world, but it made its first American debut in Ames, April of 1979. "Sixpence," a British Pantomime, was not what one might call a play with an exceptionally deep plot, but, by far, it was one of I.S.U.'s most entertaining plays of the year. The story was basically one of good guy versus bad guy, and as most often the case the good guy wins.

The play consisted of a cast of very colorful characters — colorful not only in their personalities. Each character was decked out in brilliant costumes and wigs. Throughout the play there were many successful ad-libs, one liners, and local jokes. Often the actors talked directly to the audience, engaging them in participation, and if "Sixpence" didn't draw the audience into participation, it left them laughing in their seats. Together with colorful costuming, enthusiastic actors, and witty lines, "Sing a Song of Sixpence" came off as a quick moving, highly entertaining play, which was met favorably and left the Ames audiences laughing.

Robbins brings a bit of Britain to I.S.U. theatre

An I.S.U. audience had the pleasure of being exposed to a successful British pantomime, "Sing a Song of Sixpence," but the actors had the honor of being directed by the playwright himself — Norman Robbins. Robbins, who has eleven years experience in all areas of the British Theater, came to I.S.U. as a visiting professor through the efforts of I.S.U.'s speech department. The imported director influenced students with his philosophies of acting.

Robbins stressed among the actors and actresses to be comfortable on the stage, and encouraged open participation and honest reactions to the actors' lines by the audience.

"Sing a Song of Sixpence" was not the only Robbins production staged at I.S.U. in 1979. "A Tomb With a View," a comedy-mystery play, was put on by the I.S.U. theater during the summer. "Tomb With a View," a comedy centering on the eccentric Tomb family, was written in honor of I.S.U.'s speech department member Frank Brandt and his wife. Brandt, a long-time friend of Robbins was instrumental in bringing the British playwright to Ames.

SOUTH PACIFIC

What better place for a love story than the tropical paradise of the south seas? The '79 Stars Over Veishea cast worked earnestly to bring that enchanting atmosphere to C. Y. Stephens Auditorium, May 3-5, in the production of "South Pacific."

The play is set in World War II on an island in the South Pacific. Nellie Forbush, a naive American nurse from Arkansas (Dawn Van Maanen) falls in love with a rich plantation owner, Emile DeBeque (Mike Earll). At the same time, romance kindles between Joe Cable, an American lieutenant (Doug Thompson) and Liat (Lee Hansen), a native girl. While off on a dangerous mission on an enemy island, Cable is killed. DeBeque returns from duty safely and finds Nellie waiting for him at his plantation. Their reunion ends the story with "Some Enchanted Evening."

"Some Enchanted Evening" might have been the most romantic song of the musical, but the officers stationed on the island received the most applause when they proved through song and dance that there's "Nothing Like a Dame." The number had so much power and energy that it received a standing ovation in the middle of the show. When asked why "Nothing Like a Dame" was so successful, cast member Paul Orngard said, "Our main purpose was to entertain the audience, to give them what they wanted. The audience wanted us to act happy. It makes them feel happy too."

The production was without a set crew, so not only were the leads and chorus busy rehearsing songs and dances, they were also designing, hammering and painting sets. Almost 50 palm trees on stage were constructed by hand. They were made of wire frames covered with muslin and wheat paste.

The production staff: producer, Kathy Davies, director, Scott Linn, choreographer, Mary Drew, and music director, Ruth Reinhardt.

On Mar. 9 the Union Board Theater opened its Shakespeare in the Shop series with "As You Like It." Upon entering the Maintenance Shop, one took a seat on either side of the centrally located stage. An enjoyable part of the evening was the fact that with the close surroundings, one was able to feel as though he was participating in the action. One was delightfully treated to the full array of sight, sound, and movement so inherent in Shakespeare.

The costuming was authentic and bright, with a variety of curious, even appetizing props. The movement, ranging from the fool's nimble acrobatics to a contesting wrestling match, was carefully choreographed and flowed easily.

As a whole the play was very entertaining and highly commendable. Its true success lay in its ability to effectively draw one into the dialect and situations, causing one to forget that the play is nearly 400 years old.

Jazz with the "King of Swing"

The Big Band era may be over, but Benny Goodman still remains the "King of Swing." Goodman brought his musical talents to C. Y. Stephens Auditorium June 1 during ISU's Alumni Days. He and his band thrilled the sentimental fans with a nostalgic performance of jazz.

Since 1919, when Goodman received his first clarinet from a local synagogue, until the present, Benny has used his supreme music ability to cultivate a style that epitomizes the best in jazz. The versatile artist, at the age of 70, showed no signs of losing any of his youthful energy. He spun around with pep as he played those clarinet keys.

After his opening number, Goodman gave the stage to his band members: Al Clint on saxophone, Warren Vache on trumpet, Wayne Andre on trombone, Ronnie Davis on drums, Gene Bertonchini on guitar, Slam Stewart on bass and John Bunch on piano. The band's melodies proved their talent as fine jazzmen, but Benny Goodman still holds his royal title.

In concert: Pablo Cruise

From the opening number "Worlds Away" to a three song encore, the group Pablo Cruise kept the crowd asking for more. The group played their Latin-American influenced music for a near-sellout crowd at C. Y. Stephens Auditorium, Aug. 8th.

But it wasn't only the music that kept the crowd interested. Pablo Cruise group members tried to befriend their fans by maintaining eye contact, throwing kisses and complimenting their audience. Keyboard man Cory Lerios even got the crowd up to dance for the song "Go to Rio."

The classy staging had Steve Price and his drums set up on a white platform and Lerios pounded away at a white grand piano on a platform. The two guitarists/vocalists, Dave Jenkins and Bruce Day, stood between both white platforms.

Lerios captured the crowd's hearts. His muscular arms flexed with each key he hit. With Pablo Cruise's special pizazz and free flowing music, few went home disappointed.

Big Shot:

It had to be Billy

"You had to be a big shot, din cha?" Billy Joel's strong voice bellowed through Hilton Coliseum May 1st. And with all of his stage strutting, Joel certainly lived up to his "Big Shot" lyrics. His enthusiasm and energy were demonstrated by his fancy footwork as he jumped around stage and ran from keyboard to keyboard. The versatile singer-composer-musician was a stereotypical showoff, and the capacity crowd responded to his act with screams and applause.

Joel played the piano vigorously throughout the concert. His voice never weakened and his lyrics came across clearly.

With a smoky atmosphere for effect, Billy Joel opened his show singing "The Stranger." For "New York State of Mind," he brought out cigarettes and sunglasses to set the scene. And he even got his road crew into the act by having them snap to the tune of "Stilletto."

Joel made every effort to keep in contact with his fans who were seated behind the stage. Frequently as he played the piano, he directed his attention to them. His drummer even gave a juggling drumstick side show for Joel's loyal fans who purchased seats behind the stage.

The audience worked hard for an encore. Their coaxing consisted of screams, feet stomping, hand clapping and "bic flicking." Finally, Billy Joel returned to sing "Scenes From an Italian Restaurant" and "Only the Good Die Young."

Billy Joel's performance will not be forgotten at ISU. One Joel fan who camped out for tickets said, "It was definitely well worth spending the night out in a tent, freezing and missing sleep."

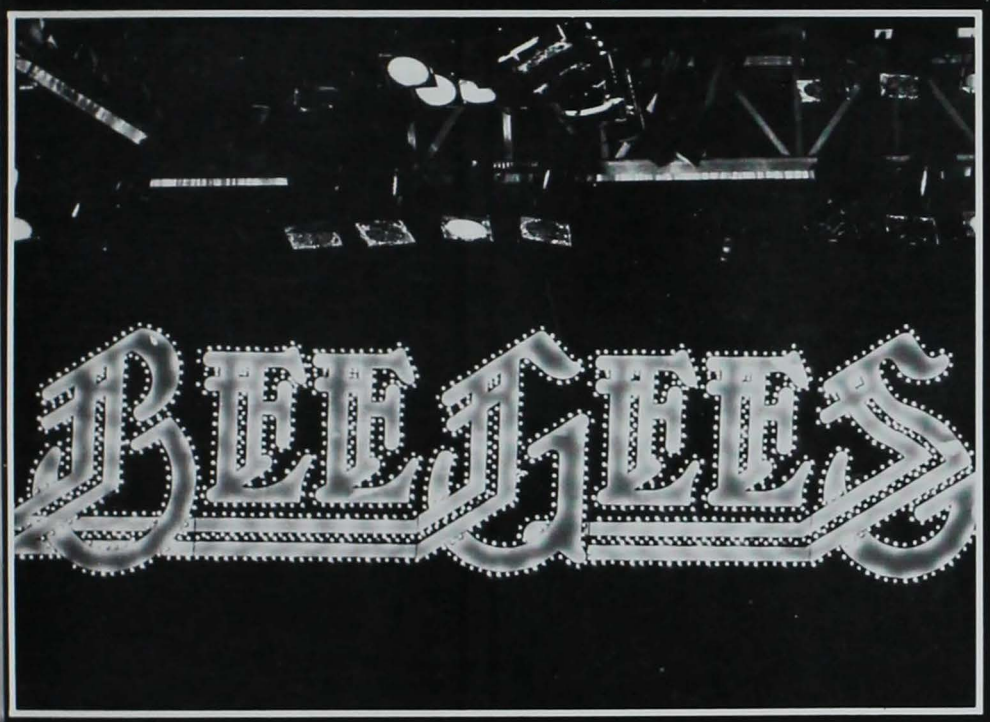
"Stayin' Alive"



Hilton Coliseum shook with excitement Ju. 24th, when the Bee Gees came to ISU. The Gibb brothers, known as the Bee Gees, drew a diverse sellout crowd, and their spectacular performance had everyone from teenie-boppers and college coeds to moms, dads and grandmas "Stayin' Alive."

The capacity crowd paid $15, $12.50 and $10 for a dynamic "Night Fever" performance. The seven semi-trucks of equipment parked behind the Coliseum was a hint this show would be ornate. The elaborate set included a multi-tiered stage, a colossal array of lights, and a group of 15 musicians and backup singers. There were many special effects including: flashing rows of lights during "Nights on Broadway," an explosion during "Tragedy," lasers, and a spinning silver ball that sent light rays dancing all over the crowd.

The Bee Gees played most of their latest music but certainly gained approval from older fans present when they featured a medley of their 60's hits.

C. Y. Stephens Auditorium's stage became the levee at Natchez on the mighty Mississippi River. The stevedores unloaded the "Cotton Blossom" riverboat, while the townswomen, Clothed in colorful dresses with parasols, and the townsmen, decked in long coats and top hats, gathered around to welcome the "Show Boat."

Sponsored by the Iowa State University Music Council, Gingerbread Productions brought the 'ole riverboat nightclub act associated with the south to C.Y. in the production of "Show Boat." The musical ran Oct. 26th through Oct. 28th.

Although his part as Cap'n Andy was not as distinctive as his role as Sgt. O'Rourke in television's comedy "F-Troop," actor Forrest Tucker was well received with applause from the audience when he marched onto the levee in the Show Boat parade.

The story typifies the show business drama of boy meets girl, boy loses girl, boy and girl reunite. Capt. Andy's virtuous daughter, Magnolia, and the sophisticated card gambler, Gaylord Ravenal, take the leading roles of the show boat's performance when the original leads leave town after their secret of a mixed blood marriage is revealed.

Nolia and Gay's stage love develops into marriage, and they move to Chicago to live. But after a few good years, Ravenal loses his luck with the cards and he gambles everything away. He leaves Nolia and their daughter Kim.

Magnolia has some success singing in Chicago, but in the end she returns to the "Cotton Blossom." And like most love stories, the two lovers meet again. In this tale, Ravenal is already waiting on the levee for his lovely Nolia. Their reunion kiss has the entire troupe in song and dance, and the curtain closes on a happy ending.

All Aboard for Show Boat

Butterfly McQueen, known as the unforgettable character of Prissy in the movie "Gone With the Wind," dazzled the audience with her high, sweet voice. Her part as Queenie was not a lead role, but her performance in the number, "Can't Help Lovin' Dat Man" was indelible. The lively 68-year-old woman jumped about the stage, and even shimmied for the crowd.

The costumes and sets were well-designed. The partial construction of a riverboat was completed with backdrops, and during many scene changes, the boat was simply pulled open at the stern and a new set was ready for a different scene. The bright colors of lights, costumes, and backdrops added to the entire feeling of a gala riverboat show. And "Show Boat" was a gala musical production — even on land.

¡Viva México!

Gran Folklorico Fiesta Comes to Iowa State

A near-capacity audience shouted "arriba!" in overwhelming response to the colorful "Gran Folklorico de Mexico." Hand-clapping, impromptu shouts of approval (in Spanish, of course) and steps on the side of the foot, characterized ancient dances and demonstrated legends and age-old customs of Mexico. The dance concert was held in C. Y. Stephens auditorium, Oct. 5.

Music was provided by members of the 35 performers which comprise the group. In the traditional mariache band, the xylophone players were particularly impressive. The speed in which the two performers moved the hammers along the keyboard was remarkable.

The women's costumes were intricate and colorful. Often, skirts were held up through an entire dance, representing femininity and showing off needlework.

In one dance, the women wore torches on their heads while a couple tied a red bow with their feet. This combination of special effects in one dance is a favorite of the natives of Mexico.

The dance of the Deer provided a contrast to the otherwise cheery, colorful dances. It was, nonetheless striking. Jorge Tyler portrayed the deer, complete with horns and a loincloth. The expression in his eyes and the precise movements in every muscle helped produce an effective and sensitive portrayal of a hunted deer.

Fomona Gaoma, noted Mexican recording star, sang several medlies. Although extremely talented, her mood was not consistent with that of the playful, fun-loving attitude of the rest of the troupe.

The group was making a world-wide tour when they stopped in Ames. They had visited twelve countries.

Jack Aranson is the mischievious Da, above,

Jack Aranson and Curtis J. Armstrong share a fond memory in a scene from "Da," below.

Having problems with your parents? We all do at one time or another. But, how would you react if your parents were no longer around to 'get on your case?'

That's the gist of "Da," a story of a man's reminiscences of his father who has recently passed away, and the situations that made him into the person he is now. It was a perfect play for Parent's Day, 1979.

"Da," performed by the American Theatre Productions, won four Tony awards and was named the best play of 1978 by the New York Drama critics circle.

Author Hugh Leonard set the play in rural Ireland where "Da" means 'father' just as 'Dad' does here.

As the play begins, the audience hears a rich, deep female voice sing an old Irish song whose lyrics set the mood for the first scene. As her voice fades away, the lights reveal Charlie, the main character, in his boyhood home.

"DA"

Interrupting Charlie's thoughts while doing his paperwork, Da comes from a back room, as though he was still alive, yelling at Charlie. One gets the feeling after that first dialogue between Charlie and Da that Charlie is actually more fond of his Da than he is willing to admit.

This pattern of flashbacks to people and events which had influenced him as he was growing continued throughout the play.

One scene early in the play showed Charlie as a young man (played by Curtis J. Armstrong) faced with one of the most important events in a man's life . . . his first time making love to a woman.

The scene was well staged. Charlie at his present age sat at one side of the set, while young Charlie and his female friend were at another. Middle-aged Charlie served as a latent conscience and narrator of young Charlie's actions. One can imagine the humor and nervousness of the situation.

This is one of many scenes in which middle-aged Charlie looked on in silence as his younger self struggled to gain some independence from his domineering parents or endured ungrateful treatment from his self-righteous first boss, skillfully played by Kevin O'Leary.

Jack Aranson gave a great performance as Da. The character was a study in contrasts — stubborn, profane and domineering, yet warm, honest and hard-working. Aranson brought out the many sides of the old man's personality.

All of the major actors gave excellent performances as they brought Leonard's complex and believable characters to life.

The play succeeded because it isn't really about a single section of any society. It's about everyone.

The chance to share his emotions, joys, and sorrows, he said, is what drew him to mime.

So, to a capacity crowd at the Maintenance Shop Sept. 27, Frenkel shared what he learned while studying under the masters of mime.

"Mime is an idea expressed through the body," Frenkel said. "Facial expressions should simply compliment the body." "Today," he added, "there's too much acting from the head up."

A 1977 ISU graduate in speech and theater, Frenkel has studied with Entienne Decroux, the "father of mime," with Ella Jaroscewicz-Marceau, and with Marcel Marceau at Marceau's school, L'ecole International de Mimodrame.

The audience at the Maintenance Shop saw a professional performance — an hour and 15 minutes of mime full of energy and thought.

Blue Grass Festival and Art in the Park

Children wearing clown faces ran around the Scheman Building courtyard as part of the Art in the Park celebration Saturday, Oct. 13. Ames Senior High School Thespians painted faces as a fund raiser.

Other local artists displayed their work on card tables and against snowfences. Pottery, oil paintings and rag dolls were some of the more traditional wares offered for sale.

Handmade lamps, photographs, leather purses and Indian jewelry were also sold on the windy autumn day. Granola cookies and hot apple cider were served during the folk dance show which featured the Onion Creek Cloggers from Ames, as well as square dance groups from all over Iowa.

Bill Monroe and the Bluegrass Boys from Kentucky headlined the Bluegrass Festival in C.Y. Stephens Auditorium that night. The festival opened with the Hotmud Family. The audience responded to the group's mellow bluegrass sound. The festival's tempo picked up when the Onion Creek Cloggers and String Band performed.

The group drew applause from the audience with their festive colored dances and rhythmical bluegrass. The dancers ranged in age from eight to 52 and stomped their feet to the fast pace of the String Band.

The highlight of the night peaked as the "Father of Bluegrass," Bill Monroe, was introduced. Monroe started his band in small country bars in Kentucky. Today they perform in dark suits with white shirts.

Monroe and his band interacted with the audience; granting musical requests and posing for pictures.

The audience responded with standing ovations and knee-slapping delight. Monroe was called back for an encore and responded with three numbers, to the crowd's pleasure.

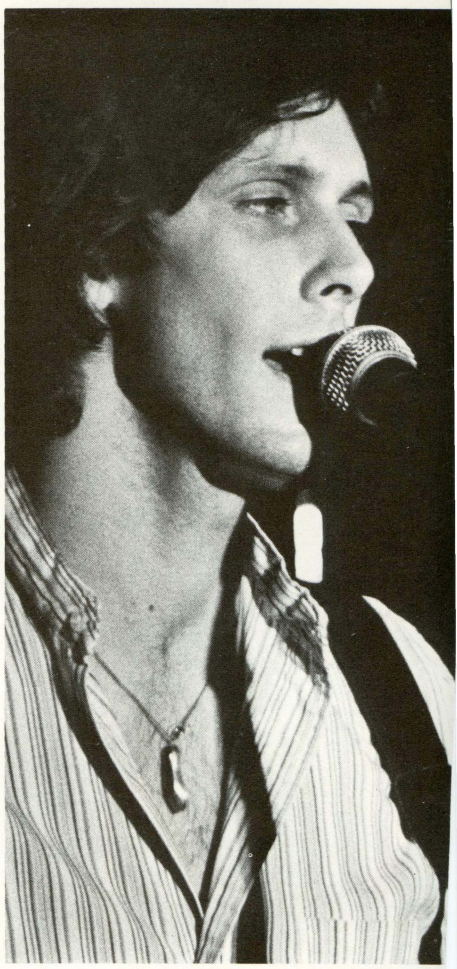
Pousette — Dart Band at the Shop



Lead vocalist Jon Pousette-Dart sings a soft melody. Jim Wilcox

The Maintenance Shop began the 1979-80 school year on Sept. 18; opening another season of fine music with the Pousette-Dart Band.

The crowd at the Shop was very receptive, loud and rowdy — ready for some rock and roll. And the PD Band did their best to provide it. They opened with "County Line" and "Gotta Get Far Away from You;" both crowd pleasers.

Jon Pousette-Dart, organizer of the band, provided the lead guitar and vocals. He was accompanied by John Curtis on rhythm guitar and John Troy on bass. The audience was also treated to a number of drum solos by the band's drummer Mike Dawe. Not only were his solos entertaining, but also his facial expressions. They were visible proof of intense concentration.

John Troy had a tendency to flirt with the girls showing his talented smooth and easy style. He was the featured vocalist in a crowd favorite "Old Mexico" — a story of a bank teller from LA who goes to Mexico, buys a Mexican's sister, marries her and sells dirty postcards.

Another crowd favorite "May you Dance," featured John Curtis on the mandolin and brought the crowd clapping and stomping when he began dueting with the drummer. If this wasn't enough to arouse the crowd, Jon Pousette-Dart asked, "Are you still with us?" He then shouts, "This is definitely NOT disco, as flashing lights encircled the stage. This brought the crowd promptly to their feet in applause.

The PD Band had a varied repertoire with many cuts off their latest album including the title cut "Never Enough," and the eery, sensuous tune "Long Legs."

The band returned to shouts of "PDB" and played two encore tunes. One was their own version of an old 50's song "My Boyfriend's Back."

Albert Collins Does Some Ice-Pickin' Blues

The Albert Collins concert at the Maintenance Shop Sept. 28 was reminiscent of the cool September air, crisp and harsh.

Collins walked onstage more like a showman than a blues guitarist. He played his Fender Statocaster loud, while his backup band kept up a driving blues beat.

Their first set consisted of three songs — a traditional blues progression, "Honey Hush," and "A Cold, Cold Feeling." During his rendition of "A Cold, Cold Feeling," Collins left the M-Shop and stood in the outside hallway, playing a harsh, frantic jam that drove the audience to their feet applauding his antics. He came back in, ending the song with a rhythmic, hand-slapping beat on his guitar that brought the cheering audience to their feet once again.

Collins' band members had nothing in common except their love of playing the blues. The saxophonist, A. C. Reed, is a seasoned musician who has been playing blues saxophone for 35 years. He was the group leader and gave the musical cues. The drummer, introduced as "Mike," was young and inexperienced. But he concentrated hard on A. C.'s and Collins' signals. Marvin Jackson played rhythm guitar. He was competent and very technical — with a distinct style all his own. The bassist, introduced only as "Johnny" was soulful and consistent, typical of a blues guitarist.

After sipping on a Heineken during break, Collins' second set was more of the driving steady rhythmic blues. He played "Mr. Magic," "Going to New York," and A. C. Reed's song — "Playing Wild." Collins put a mike up to his already powerful Fender amp and played the music louder and harsher.

The crowd appreciated Collins' antics, and after two encores went away knowing they had seen and heard some Texas blues — Albert Collins style.

Fun at the Fiesta With Flamenco Guitarist: Montoya

It's like seeing three performances in one.

Carlos Montoya — a world renowned flamenco guitarist offered an unbelievable performance to a near-capacity crowd in C. Y. Stephens Auditorium, Oct. 29.

Imagine a song with an intricate melody and a basic accompaniment. Now imagine the same song being played on a guitar. Montoya not only played two-part harmony on his guitar, but sometimes three-part harmony with accompaniment.

It was amazing to see Montoya's fingers glide so swiftly across his guitar while making his playing look so easy.

The music Montoya plays comes from his Gypsy and Spanish heritage. He is the first guitarist ever to perform in concert playing only Flamenco music. Since that time, he has been the world's most acclaimed Flamenco guitarist with a unique style and flair.

His first selection, "Fiesta," was the gypsies' version of a fiesta with rhythmic dancing, clapping and finger snapping brought to life on the guitar.

First U.S. Tour for Cloudgate Dance Theatre

Dramatization of a tribute to heroic Taiwanese pioneers, who were similar to the pilgrims on the Mayflower, right. Tim Roush

Imagine balancing on one leg while rotating your body in a circle. Do you think you could do it? If not, you might have agreed that the 20-plus members of the Cloud Gate Dance Theatre of Taiwan were physically talented performers. The near capacity crowd at C. Y. Stephens Auditorium on Nov. 8 witnessed myriad supple movements as well as brightly colored costumes.

One of the more Westernized dance themes was "On the Horseback," performed by the entire company. Like a pack of stampeding horses, the men came on stage doing cartwheels and roundoffs with amazing rapidity. It was fascinating when all dancers formed a circle and leaped as if riding galloping horses.

There were two exceptional dance selections which were based on Chinese myths and folk tales: "The Tale of the White Serpent" and "Crossing the Black Water." "Crossing the Black Water" was an amazing performance.

This dance, a tribute to Taiwan's pioneers, is said to be the Chinese version of the crossing of the Mayflower. The company marched on stage step-by-step in one great cluster. One muscular man was perched on the shoulders of another to hold a large sheet which symbolized a ship's sail.

The absence of expression on each person's face further enhanced the significance of the dance's serious theme.

Using a large sheet as waves, dancers screamed, pantomimed drowning in a storm, and rescuing each other from the raging seas.

The Cloud Gate Dance Theatre of Taiwan was making its first tour of North America in the ISU appearance.

The group's director, Lin Hwai-Min has studied with Martha Graham and won an award as the Best Choreographer of the Year.

Angelic voices of the Vienna Choir Boys charm the audience

Innocence and musical expertise were displayed Jan. 22, 1980, as the Vienna Choir Boys performed for a sell-out crowd at C. Y. Stephens Auditorium.

The curtain opened at 8 p.m. revealing 24 boys dressed in black shoes, blue pants, and white sailor shirts. Michael Gormley, their director, entered the stage dressed in coat and tails, ready to begin the concert.

Gormley, obviously a very accomplished pianist, accompanied the boys on their first number, Dixit Dominus. Although he accompanied the boys on a number of songs they performed acapella as well.

The Vienna Choir Boys were founded in 1498 by an imperial decree by the humanist emperor, Maximilian I. Two choirs usually tour throughout the year. The boys range in age from 10 to 13 years old. When not on tour, the boys attend their boarding school in Vienna, and when on tour they are accompanied by a tutor.

If the choir hadn't captured the audience in their first set with their impish grins and skilled voices, they did so with the one act comic opera they performed after a brief intermission. Although the songs were not in English, the dialogue was, and they entertained the audience with American slang and humor, spoken with a German accent.

Their second set included numbers by more familiar artists such as Brahms, Strauss, and a former and probably most famous Vienna Choir boy, Franz Schubert.

When the final number was announced, Blue Danube, "ahs" rang out from the audience. The crowd rose to their feet in applause after the final number, and the boys returned for one encore. They treated the audience to their only English song of the evening, "Sleigh Ride."

Winnie the Pooh and Friends

Christopher Robin, Eeyore, Piglet, Winnie the Pooh and Tigger, too, danced about Fisher Theater's stage along with the other A.A. Milne characters in the I.S.U. Theatre production "The House at Pooh Corner," directed by Sherry Hoopes.

The animated forest characters entertained children of all ages on three consecutive Saturday and Sunday afternoons with the opening performance on Jan. 12, 1980.

Amidst the giggles and shouts of "Look Mommy," Pooh and his friends gathered under the tall trees of the forest for an emergency meeting. While sitting on red and white toadstools, the group pondered over ways to save Christopher Robin from being "sent away to education" and to build Eeyore a house so he wouldn't have to sleep in the cold, snowy meadow.

They couldn't help Christopher Robin escape from going to school, but they did build Eeyore his house.

Harold Hill (Jeff Forbes) explains there's Trouble in River City. Rod Mickels.

Iowa was the setting when the curtains rose for the performance of Meredith Wilson's "The Music Man." The production was put on by the Union Board Theatre, Jan. 24-26, 1980, as a part of Wintergarden '80.

As the story goes, Harold Hill, a fast-talking traveling salesman, arrives in River City, Iowa, proclaiming that the city has trouble with a capital 'T'. The trouble is in the form of a pool hall down the street, and he convinces the townspeople that it's corrupting their children. He suggests that the kids need something else to occupy their time . . . such as a band. Of course, he, Professor Hill, is here to form a band in River City. The people are slow to realize that this is just a clever salesman's technique and they quickly invest their money in the band instruments and uniforms Mr. Hill is selling.

The beautiful, single, and hard-to-get Marian Paroo, the town librarian, is wise to his style, though. She wants the town to realize that he is just a salesman. But, when her quiet, very shy little brother, Winthrop, begins to rave about the band, Marian realizes there's something good in what Mr. Hill is doing. By this time the town realizes they have been swindled when the children aren't producing any music from their instruments. Marian now must convince the town that Mr. Hill is O.K.

The play was produced by Craig Hiemstra, directed by Scott Linn, and choreographed by Mary Drew. The light-hearted drama combined with such songs as "Seventy-six Trombones," and "Goodnight My Someone," made for a very entertaining musical.

Varieties: A touch of Vaudeville

Ready for a hoe-down? The Kappa Deltas and Theta Delta Chis certainly are in "Just Another Western," above. Lisa Ellis

Singing, dancing and acting filled the Great Hall of the Memorial Union during January and February when Varieties, 1980 tryouts, rehearsals and performances were held.

Varieties climaxed with Sweepstakes, Feb. 8-9, 1980. Sweepstakes was two nights of the best skits, emcees and vignettes selected from earlier performances.

Controversy played an unexpected part in Varieties Sweepstakes in 1980, when the category for "best dancers" was eliminated. Varieties Central Committee based their decision to cut the dancers out of the final program on recommendations by Varieties judges. Despite protests from the two acts eliminated, more vignettes were added to the Sweepstakes program to replace the dancers.

Six skits and six vignettes made up the Sweepstakes field — as well as one solo emcee and an emcee team.

The skits that made Sweepstakes in 1980 were well-done and enjoyable to watch. Skit plots varied from why we need buttons to the powers of mythological gods.

Two more outstanding skits were "A Diplomatic Panic" by Alpha Gamma Rho — Gamma Phi Beta, and "Grape Expectations" by Beta Theta Pi — Alpha Xi Delta. "A Diplomatic Panic" was set in the early days of our nation. The founding fathers couldn't agree on government and rules for the new country. Their wives had to come in and teach the men to cooperate. "Grape Expectations" involved love, a tyrant boss, and the search for the perfect grape. Two crows won the search for the perfect grape, but an ignored lab worker got the boss in the end.

"Fugue for a Menage de Trois" with Scott

Dow, Andrea Fitch and Rick Dirks featured good voices, ribald lyrics and hilarious gestures. Especially appropriate was the lighting of a cigarette near the end.

A punk rock parody also was a featured vignette. "Big Mic and the Metallic Marauders," performed by ISU gymnasts Tom Hardin, Stacy Maloney, Dave and Doug Smidl, was a fast-moving, funny performance.

Straight singing vignettes were performed by one solo performer and three duet acts. Selections ranged from Anne Murray to "Pippin" musical tunes.

Gene McGivern and Greg Millar were the funnier of the two emcee entries, with their parodies of the Carter-Kennedy debate, the Union Brothers and a quiz show, "Friley Feud." Dave Tillinghast, the solo emcee, relied on audience participation and imitations during his act.

Sweepstakes winners were: Best Skit: "A Diplomatic Panic," with "Grape Expectations" second and "Just Another Western" (Kappa Delta — Theta Delta Chi) third; Best Dancers: Jean and Julie Roth; Best Emcee: Tillinghast; Best Vignette: "Fugue for a Menage de Trois," first; "Big Mic," second; and Ann McAndrew, third.

Special awards went to Kathy Davies (Best Actress), Dave Saggau (Best Actor), Best Costumes: "A Diplomatic Panic"; Best Choreography: Delta Tau Delta — Delta Zeta; Best Music: Pi Kappa Alpha — Pi Beta Phi; and Best Makeup: Sigma Phi Epsilon — Alpha Delta Pi.

BARJCHE

Is there a limit to the bends and twists the human body can perform? Not for ISU's Orchesis dance club members. The versatile dancers stretched, twisted, bended and contorted their bodies in an array of movements in their annual dance production, Barjche, on Feb. 8 and 9, 1980, at C. Y. Stephens Auditorium.

The self-supporting Orchesis club does not receive any funds from the Government of the Student Body (GSB). So between practices, the dancers earnestly worked on making several of their costumes.

The costumes ranged from simple multi-colored leotards to sexy, black slit dance skirts with silver shoes. And with the colorful costumes and various lighting techniques, each number conveyed a particular mood.

In the number "Flat Forms," lighting was the key element. The hot pink lights brightened to a pale pink and the dancers' shadows became an integral part of the dance. The dancing silhouettes mimicked the onstage performers and this was a creative effect.

The performance included Moody Blues numbers as well as up-beat and fast-paced ones. There were bongo drums and supersonic sound effects that the dancers moved to. A calypso-like number ended the show, called "Danza."

Barjche featured two special guest artists, Laura Glenn and Gary Lund. Both artists demonstrated precise movements, grace and body control in their solo numbers.

Both dancers assisted the production by choreographing several numbers. Glenn and Lund are the co-directors of Two's Company, a duet repertory company that has appeared in many U.S. cities.

KENNY LOGGINS

Kenny Loggins chose C.Y. Stephens Auditorium for his only Iowa performance, on Nov. 29, 1979.

He opened his powerful performance with "I Believe in Love," from his Celebrate Me Home album. The fast pace kept up with "It'll Come to You," and his winter, 1979 hit, "This s It."

After his first numbers, Loggins requested that some beautiful girls get up and move to the music, saying "Is that too much to ask?" Then, the requests for some old favorites came from the audience. Loggins reassured the crowd all named tunes would be a part of the evening's show. He added it was great coming here "for the conversations."

Although Loggins didn't get his dancing girls right away, the crowd got their requests. Sitting on a stool with guitar in hand, Loggins first played his new ballad, "Now and Then." Then he took a trip into the past with a medley of old hits from when he was part of the duo Loggins and Messina. The medley included "Danny's Song," "House at Pooh Corner," and "Watching the River Run."

By this time, the crowd was on their feet as the band burst into a little Jamaican style music with "Junkanoo Holiday." Then Loggins grabbed his electric guitar to play the title cut from his latest album Keep the Fire, and then an older hit "Vahevala."

He ended his performance with "Angry Eyes," but the crowd, wildly clapping and whistling, wouldn't let him leave.

It took two encores before the audience was satisfied. His first included "Easy Driver" and "Whenever I Call You Friend." His second encore, "Celebrate Me Home," ended in a huge crescendo, and the audience left knowing they had heard a good concert. And if hearing some good music wasn't enough the audience was surely entertained with Loggins' leaps and bounds, as he jumped across stage Chuck Berry style in his red velvet pants and shirt.

"The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail," presented during winter quarter of 1980, was met with mixed reviews and criticisms. The play, which ran Nov. 29-30, Dec. 1, 6-8 and 13-15, 1979, was put on by ISU Theater. The play dealt with the inner frustrations of a man's conflict with individual duty vs. societal responsibilities, creating many stimulating and thought-provoking scenes for the Fisher Theater audiences.

Special effects used for sound and lighting greatly enhanced the production — though the boating scene's "splashes" simulating rowing drew a few audience giggles. But the use of flash powder to create confusion, drum marches and numerous lighting techniques was very well-done, and added sight and sound appeal.

Costuming was very authentic, especially the women's long dresses. The make-up work, done by Rod McCully, gave the illusion of age to the student actors.

In costuming and acting, perhaps Bill Stauch's portrayal of Ralph Waldo Emerson was one of the strong points of the play. In his long coat, thick sideburns and flat-brimmed hat, Stauch looked as if he had stepped out of the pages of an 11th-grade history book.

John Zarley had the demanding role of Henry David Thoreau. Since most students are familiar with at least a little of Thoreau's philosophy, Zarley perhaps had too many different expectations of characterization to live up to. In the opening scenes, his acting seemed almost wooden. But Zarley's portrayal of the famed nonconformist grew stronger as the play progressed.

Though the themes of "The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail" should hold relevance to us all, one wonders if the production might not have been more popular earlier in the '70's, when nonconformity seemed more valued than it is today. Nonetheless, this play had its moments, and left most audience members with something to ponder.

"The harmonica spoke the rhythmic blues with a voice." So said one member of the sell-out crowd at the Lamont Cranston Band concert, Nov. 30, 1979 in the Maintenance Shop.

The group leader, vocalist, and harmonica player, Pat Hayes, displayed a charisma that appeared to seduce a group of girls seated near the front to glow (or slobber) in admiration.

The 7-member group opened with "12 String," exciting the audience into a rowdy uproar.

Some of the songs were "Soul Flight," "Takin' a Chance," and "Wall Street Shuffle."

Many of the selections included instrumental solos by harmonica player, Pat Hayes; tenor saxophone player, Dick Perwa; or Bruce McCabe at the piano.

Bruce McCabe took it away in "Rise Little Children," as the lead singer and piano player. His honky-tonk music led the crowd even higher.

Hayes, dressed in a tight black T-shirt, jeans, pointed black shoes and striped socks, pleaded, complained and laughed at the audience by playing his harmonica.

Contrasting Hayes, guitarist Charlie Bingham, wearing a leather jacket, played the entire concert almost without facial expressions or gestures.

Lamont Cranston is not a member of the group, but the alter ego of "the Shadow" from an old radio series.

The full moon illuminated the clear sky over ISU's central campus. It was Dec. 3, 1979. This particular Monday evening was the night for the traditional Christmas tree lighting ceremony.

The campanile glowed from the ground flood lights as usual. But instead of playing the familiar 6:15 p.m. bell tones, Christmas carols began to chime.

People streamed down the sidewalk from Curtiss Hall toward Beardshear Hall. Grandparents, sweethearts, moms and dads with the kids, students and professors, gathered in front of Beardshear to hear the Iowa State Singers and see the magnificent Christmas tree lights turned on for the 34th time.

The Iowa State Singers huddled together on the steps of Beardshear with flashlights, candles and music sheets in hand.

Robert Molison directed the choral group from a podium on a step right of the singers. He encouraged the crowd to sing along. And the spirited audience joined in with "The First Noel" and "Deck the Halls."

President W. Robert Parks' introduction was welcomed with cheers and mitten-muffled applause. Although it was 35 degrees outside, ski parkas, wool scarves, stocking caps and mittens dressed the crowd. Some spectators even clutched cups of hot chocolate.

Parks spoke briefly. He stressed the importance of good will and friendship. After wishing the crowd a happy holiday season, and a little fumbling to find the light switch on the podium, the president said, "Here we go!"

ISU's holiday season begins with annual Christmas tree lighting

With his flip of the switch, the tall Norway spruce just east of Beardshear brillantly sparkled with multi-colored strains of Christmas tree lights.

The crowd's whispers of "Ooo, ah" seemed to verify their enjoyment of the festivities.

Sophomore Ruth Scott said, "It would have been perfect if it was snowing." She added with a grin, "and still this warm."

After a few more carols, the ISU Singers waved goodbye. The crowd dispersed in all directions. But no matter which way they went, they could hear the last selections of carillon music presented by Richard von Grabow, University Carillonneur, ring through the crisp December air.

The "Nutcracker"

The "Nutcracker" might be known as a children's ballet, but people of all ages filled C. Y. Stephens Auditorium's seats on Dec. 8 and 9, 1979 to see the Pittsburgh Ballet Theatre present "Nutcracker."

This traditional Christmas ballet enchanted its capacity audience with a mystical fairy tale. "Nutcracker" is the story of a young girl, Clara, who receives a nutcracker shaped like a soldier from the mysterious Herr Drosselmeyer.

After her family goes to bed, Clara sneaks out to the Christmas tree to play with her nutcracker. Suddenly strange sounds fill the room and magically everything begins to grow. The nutcracker comes to life, and he and his soldiers engage in a battle with the Mouse King and his mice.

The nutcracker is victorious and like most charming princes, he sweeps Clara off her feet and they journey to the Snow Kingdom and the Kingdom of Sweets.

Before leaving the Kingdom of Sweets and venturing to the Land of Enchantment, Clara and the Prince dance a beautiful pas de deux (a duet for a male and female dancer).

After their duet, the entire corps de ballet joins the Sugar Plum Fairy, Clara, and her Prince for the finale.

The dramatic lighting techniques effectively created a fairyland atmosphere. Pastel-colored lights and detailed backdrops set each scene so the audience could feel an enchanting aura on stage.

The ballerinas and danseurs dressed in colorful and frilly costumes.

The choreography offered a selection of dance movements: leaps, lifts, turns and balances. Each number demonstrated the agility, precision, and balance it takes to be a dancer.

During the number "Waltz of the Flowers," the ballerinas pitter-pattered across the stage. Their long, pink mesh skirts swirled with each graceful movement.

The decorative costumes and skilled dance movements make the "Nutcracker" a favorite Christmas special for everyone.

Nine days before Christmas and no snow on the ground. But it didn't matter for those who attended "Alleluia." The crowd filed out of the auditorium humming Christmas tunes. The choral concert certainly seemed to put the holiday spirit in everyone.

The University Chorus, Cardinal Keynotes, Iowa State Singers and ISU Brass Choir provided a musical hour of entertainment at C.Y. Stephens Auditorium Dec. 16, 1979, with a family Christmas carol concert, "Alleluia."

Glittery blue garland decked the stage along with a tall evergreen Christmas tree.

While the choral groups sang about the radiance of the Christmas tree in the number "Evergreen," a group of young children gathered around the evergreen onstage and adorned its branches with ornaments and tinsel.

Audience participation played a big part in the concert. The enthusiastic audience joined in the singing of carols upon every invitation.

The crowd was also treated with a modern dance performance which accompanied one of the final choral selections, "Christmas Cantata (Sinfonia Sacra)."

The ISU Brass Choir played "A Festival of Carols," a beautiful medley of traditional Christmas melodies.

The Cardinal Keynotes serenaded the audience with several traditional carols. Their favorite, "Sleigh Ride," seemed to be the audience's favorite, too. The choral group put a lot of body movement and facial expressions into the number.

Freshman Barb Thomas' four medalist titles paced the 1979 fall women's golf squad to three invitational meet titles.

Thomas turned in her season best 73-73-146 score in the Wisconsin Invitational, as ISU placed first in a field of 14. She was also the medalist in the Illinois State and Northern Iowa Invitational titles ISU won.

The 'A' team placed in the top four in all but one of the seven invitationals they competed in during fall 1979. Two ISU squads competed in the ISU Invitational held at Veenker Oct. 21 and 22. The 'A' squad placed third and the 'B' team was seventh among the 13 teams competing.

Thomas also held the team's best average for the fall season with a 77.93. Other team leaders were: Mary Jo Cunningham, 83.60; Dawn Kain, 84.36; Ann Barnes, 84.60; and Sara Kneeskern, 85.21.

Barnes led the team with an 85.5 season average in spring, 1979 competition. The spring schedule included play in five tournaments. The ISU team finished in the top third in just two of the five spring tournaments.

Senior Dana Kain's seventh place finish in the 1979 Big Eight men's golf meet highlighted the team's spring finish and qualified him as a member of the first team All-Big Eight squad.

In spring competition, team members Craig Ried, Danny Walker, Greg Wolff, Clay Davis and Kain broke the school record for 18 holes with a score of 294. The team also placed seventh among 18 teams at the Drake Relays Invitational.

Kain and co-captains Ried and Harry Lockwood finished up their eligibility in the spring of 1979. Coach Dale Anderson named Davis and Wolff co-captains for the 1979-80 season.

Davis won medalist honors and led the team to the meet title at the 1979 Willian Jewell Invitational in Liberty, Mo.

They also hosted the 12-team ISU Invitational and won the meet title.

ISU dominated the track scene in Iowa but couldn't break into the upper echelon of the Big Eight. But with loads of returning talent those days appear just around the corner.

Led by All-American half miler Dave Korir and Big Eight champion shot putter John Scheetz, many pre-season prognosticators felt 1979 would be the year ISU climbed into the upper division of Big Eight men's track.

Indeed, after the first couple weeks of performances those lofty predictions looked attainable. In addition to performing well in a pair of triangulars, the Cyclones ran away with the "Big Four" meet, outdistancing state rivals Northern Iowa, Iowa, and Drake.

But when the Big Eight meet was over, Iowa State's 47½ point total left them mired in seventh place. Kansas piled up 137 points to win the meet for the 12th time in the last 13 years.

John Scheetz brought home the only gold at the Big Eight meet. The sophomore weightman was a consistent winner throughout the year, finishing ninth in the NCAA indoor shot put.

For the third straight year ISU won the 4X800 meter relay at the Drake Relays. This year brothers Dave and Zac Korir, Steve Petrie and Brian Darrow needed a come-from-behind sprint from the elder Korir to nab the victory.

Both the 4X100 and 4X400 meter relay teams set school records in '79, and with the personnel on the teams the new records could be on shaky ground.

Sophomore Jay Bradley teamed with freshmen Kevin Kuchel, Mike Blasingame and Randy Willer in both events. The quartet finished seventh in the 4X100 at Drake and had the third best qualifying time in the 4X400, but failed to make the finals after finishing third in their heat.

In addition to Scheetz's ninth place NCAA finish, the distance medley team of Dave Korir, Petrie, Blasingame and Richard Kaitany finished seventh nationally. Korir also qualified for nationals in two other events. Brother Zac, plus Kuchel and high jumper Steve Kuehl were also qualifiers.

Hurdler Debbie Esser became the first woman to win four straight titles at the national AIAW outdoor track meet. The senior star led the ISU women's team to its sixth straight Big Eight title and a 17th place finish in the national meet.

In winning the national title, Esser set AIAW and ISU marks in the 400-meter hurdles. Her time of 56.63 also set a track record at Michigan State University, where the meet was held.

Esser also won her fourth Big Eight hurdle title and her third consecutive Drake Relays title.

Twins Debbie and Diane Vetter also placed at nationals. They placed sixth and twelfth, respectively in the 1500-meter run. Deb won both the 800 and 1500-meter runs in the conference meet. She was expected to place higher at nationals, but was hampered by a pulled hamstring.

Long-time women's track and cross country coach Chris Murray left ISU for Arizona State after the 1979 spring season. He was replaced by Ron Renko of Golden Valley Junior College.

Team members not returning for the 1980 season include Esser, Celeste Johnson, Evelyn McMeekin, Ellie Mahal, Trudy Rebsamen, Katy Schilly, Sue Deppe and Kim Blakeslee.

Despite a last place finish in the Big Eight meet, the ISU men's tennis team finished the spring 1979 season with a 17-14 dual meet record. According to Coach Bill Landin that may be an achievement never reached before.

"We beat a lot of teams last year that we had lost to in the past," he said.

The team began the spring season with a trip to San Diego, where they won just two of their five meets. After they returned home, they suffered a 9-0 loss to the University of Iowa, but came back to beat Central College of Pella by the same score in their next meet.

The team played 10 matches in the fall of 1979, but the 8-2 mark won't go on record, as the matches were exhibitions.

"We didn't play tough teams, so our record was not a real indication of our performance, but it gave me a chance to see them play. There are four new scholarship boys, so I look for a much improved program next year," Landin said.

After a 4-4 spring season in 1979, the ISU women's tennis team finished with a 2-9 record in fall 1979 play.

For the fall season, second year coach Christa Townsend had only three players back as Karin Zalesky, Julie Dankle and Tracy Rector returned as veterans.

But two junior college transfers helped the team out when they came in and assumed roles as the top players in both singles and doubles action.

Patty Paone and Kim Wishard alternated play in the top two singles positions and paired to form the top doubles team as well.

Zalesky, who was 14-10 in number one singles play last spring, also saw a lot of fall action.

Others who played singles last spring were Holly Walkup, Charise Edwards, Mary Crimmins and Dankle.

Softball team finishes 27-8 for best year

The pitching threesome of Tammy Rueckert, Carol Eich and Julie Johannsen led the women's softball team to a 27-8 record. The 1979 spring record makes it the team's winningest season ever.

On the Cyclones' way to their record season, they won the Nebraska Tournament, took second in the District 3 Iowa AIAW tournament and third in the Big Eight Tournament they hosted in Fort Dodge April 13-14.

The wins weren't always easy as evidenced by ISU's average of 4.4 runs per game as compared to their opponents' 1.7. In fact, 22 of the Cyclones' 35 games were decided by three runs or less. Seventeen of those games were won by the Cyclones, to the credit of Rueckert, Eich and Johannsen.

Rueckert was the workhorse of the staff, throwing 102 innings. Twice during the season, she pitched a five-game winning streak. She had a 12-6 record for the season, throwing 83 strikeouts. She kept her earned run average at 0.89.

Eich went 8-0 for the season, compiling a 0.67 E.R.A. Johannsen kept her E.R.A. at the team low, 0.48. She had a 5-1 record in 43⅔ innings. The pitching staff — with the help of Greta Budweg and Eich's sister Julie — had a team E.R.A. of 0.96.

Shortstop Kathy Lively had the best batting average on the team with a .322. Other batting leaders were Julie Eich with a .286 and Greta Budweg with a .284. Budweg also led the team in RBI's with 18.

Outfielder Faye Perkins finished with a .280 batting average and third baseman Julie Hyland batted .275 for the season.

Reviewing the season, coach Lu Gecewicz said, "We made too many errors and we didn't hit as well as I would've liked, but the pitching came through for us.

I was very pleased with our record. I've had some successful young players out. As a unit we worked well together," she said.

Gecewicz is 49-17 in her two years here as a coach.

Fall season time to learn

After a successful season in the spring of 1979, the women's softball squad fell to 1-8 in its first season ever of fall competition.

"I'm sure you'll see a total turn around come spring," said coach Lu Gecewicz, who is in her third season at ISU.

The Cyclones lost five of the eight games by just one point, and two more by slim margins.

"If you look at our batting averages, we're way above our opponents. Our fielding was way below par though," Gecewicz said. She said her team lost games because of lack of experience in working together.

Carol Eich and Faye Perkins who led the team to success last spring, both graduated and other players from last spring did not return to the team this fall. Among players who were not back were Lori Adams, Julie Eich and Nancy Faber.

Gecewicz said she didn't have time to get organized this fall. "There were times when we had just one day to pick a team and practice before a game.

It was a learning experience. We'll have the quirks out by spring and we'll be the best team ever at ISU," she said.

Tough early season opponents, adverse weather, and a rugged Big Eight eastern division race all had a hand in an up and down 1979 Iowa State baseball season. When the final out had been made, the downs outnumbered the ups, and Clair Rierson's club finished on the short end of a 21-28 campaign.

The season began with the annual spring trip, this year to beautiful Hawaii. But the trip was far from a vacation and the natives were less than friendly as ISU dropped five of six games to top-ranked Hawaii of Honolulu. Iowa State managed to salvage the final game of the series with a 7-6 victory.

The trip became a little more enjoyable on the island of Hilo as the Cyclones split four games with Hawaii of Hilo, winning easily 10-0 and 8-2, and losing two squeakers 4-3 and 3-2.

Back in the states the going didn't get much easier. ISU dropped two of three to powerful Oral Roberts, split a doubleheader with Missouri Western, and lost a pair to Wichita State.

A season of:
UPS and DOWNS

The Cyclones then ran into their toughest opponent of the year — Mother Nature. The team didn't even get into the batter's box against her as the next 15 games were either rained or snowed out.

Finally the sun came out, the Big Eight season opened, ISU bats came alive, and the Cyclones were in an upswing. It began with doubleheader splits with Oklahoma and Oklahoma State, both ranked in the top 20 at the time.

After 21 straight games on the road, it was home to Cap Timm Field and Kansas State. ISU knocked off the Wildcats 10-1 and 5-4. The next victim was Colorado, 8-3 and 2-1, followed by a sweep of Simpson College.

Since the start of the Big Eight season, ISU had compiled an 8-2 record — a perfect 6-0 at home — and had pushed their season record to 13-14. They stood at 6-2 in the Big Eight eastern division, only a game behind Nebraska going into an important four-game series with the Cornhuskers.

But the weekend in Lincoln turned out to be one of the downs of the ISU season as the Big Red swept the series. Nebraska shut the Cyclones out twice, allowed only five runs in four games, and virtually knocked ISU out of the Big Eight race.

Iowa State tried to regroup after the losses by sweeping a doubleheader with William Penn. But on a road trip to Kansas, ISU frustrations began to show. After a 15-2 loss in the first game and trailing in the second, ISU was forced to forfeit after assistant coach Larry Corrigan got into a tussle with one of the umpires. Corrigan was later suspended for the rest of the season as a result of his behavior.

Back home again, ISU lost another four-game series to eventual Big Eight Champion Missouri. In two of the Missouri games the Cyclones grabbed early leads but let them slip away.

The final blow was a humiliating 16-6, 13-2 doubleheader loss to Iowa in Iowa City. But the Cyclones did manage to finish on an up note, sweeping the final four-game series with Creighton.

Iowa State finished the year with a team batting average of .263. Junior third baseman Pete Seyfer was named the most valuable hitter with a .329 average, also belting three home runs. Jim Wahlig won the most valuable freshman award — he was the only other Cyclone over .300 with a .323 average.

Seyfer was named to the Big Eight second team, as was senior first baseman Al Benson, while Wahlig received honorable mention honors. Greg Lempke gave up football to give baseball a shot. It paid off as his six home runs tied a club record for the most in a season.

No ISU pitcher finished with an individual record over .500. But senior Gary Loes, with a 4-4 mark and 5.37 ERA was named the team's most valuable pitcher.

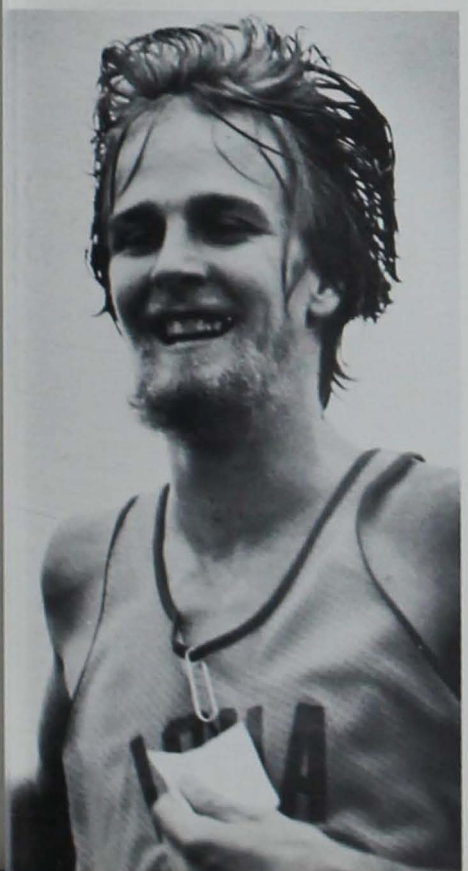
Kaitany Tops Strong Team, Places 35th in NCAA Meet



Hampered by a pulled hamstring, Richard Kaitany finished in 11th place in the 1979 Big Eight cross country championships. He came back to set a new ISU record, placing 35th in the NCAA national meet, with a time of 29:59.

Kaitany was the only ISU representative at nationals. He placed second in the District 5 meet to qualify.

He also set a new course record of 24:27 in the ISU Open. Kaitany won every dual meet the Cyclones competed in.

Gene McGivern, Jim Ijams, Bob Verbeeck, Steve Arch, Scott Brink and Shawn Cogley were consistently in the top 10 places in most meets.

Due to this strength, the Cyclones had easy victories. In dual competition, ISU beat Drake 23-32, Mankato State 17-38, South Dakota State University 17-43 and Nebraska 20-40.

Women Fall From The Top

Teamwork was the name of the game for the Cyclones throughout the year, as ISU placed four runners in the top nine of every meet, above left. Jeff Mitts

For the first time in five years, Iowa State's women's cross country team was not the national champion. North Carolina State took the title away from the Cyclones in 1979 as ISU finished ninth.

Although ISU runners were hampered by injuries, first-year coach Ron Renko said the injuries weren't the main reason for the lower finish.

"We had been rated 10th all season, although we had hoped to place fifth," he said. "So it was not an unrespectable finish. The main reason we didn't place in the top five teams was because the competition was greatly improved — it was a tough field."

But injuries did take their toll. Debbie Vetter, who finished seventh in the 1978 AIAW finals, missed the entire 1979 season with a thigh injury.

Christine McMeekin was the season leader for ISU, finishing first in four of the five meets

But an Achilles tendon aliment dropped her to 87th place in the nationals. She was the fourth highest ISU finisher in that meet.

Finishing ahead of her were Mary Seybold in 42nd, Wren Schafer, 65th, and Diane Vetter, 76th. They were often close behind McMeekin in the regular season, as ISU placed at least four runners in the top nine in every meet.

As a team, ISU won all five meets they participated in before nationals. ISU won the Big Eight title for the fifth year in a row, outdistancing second place Kansas 31-64. McMeekin was the Big Eight champion, setting a course record.

The Cyclones also won team titles at the USA Midwest Collegiate Meet, the Iowa State Invitational, the Southern Illinois Invitational, and the AIAW Regional Championships.

Growing Up in a Hurry

First-year head coach Donnie Duncan (middle) receives congratulations from two of his assistants following his first major college victory, a 38-10 triumph over Bowling Green, above. Rod Mickels

"Green as the Iowa corn," said one sportswriter. "Babies," said another.

Call it what you want, but youth was the definitive word for the 1979 Iowa State football team when the Big Eight sportswriters came to town in August.

From these remarks, one might get the impression that the Cyclones would come onto the field wearing diapers rather than jocks, and sucking on pacifiers instead of mouthpieces.

The fact that the Cyclones returned the smallest number of starters (eight) in the Big Eight might have been cause for alarm. But although much talent was lost with the graduation of the 1978 team, and coach Earle Bruce was at Ohio State, new head coach Donnie Duncan didn't exactly inherit an empty locker room.

All-Big Eight talents Brian Neal, Chris Boskey, and Mike Schwartz headed the list of returnees, that also included a dozen redshirted freshmen from one of the best recruiting years ever.

The offensive backfield, despite the loss of record-setting Dexter Green, appeared in good shape. Victor Mack, Rocky Gillis, Dan Goodwin, and Mike Payne took turns stealing the headlines in spring practice as they battled for the starting tailback spot. Jack Seabrooke and Tom Roach returned at fullback and veterans Walter Grant, John Quinn, and Terry Rubley all were back at Quarterback.

So, with a team sprinkled with veterans and a lot of young, unproven talent the Cyclones entered the opener as a two-touchdown favorite over Bowling Green and came away with an easy 38-10 win.

It didn't take Gillis long to make the fans forget about Dexter Green. The sophomore emerged from the pack of ISU tailbacks and exploded for 169 yards and three touchdowns.

But while Gillis was impressive he wasn't the whole show, as eight ISU backs amassed 428 yards on the ground — only 15 short of a school record.

On the other side of the line the ISU defense kept Bowling Green quarterback Mike Wright — voted as one of the best in the country — in check, picking off three passes.

Another new star that emerged was freshman kicker Alex Giffords. He was perfect from placement, drilling home all five extra points and adding a field goal.

But after the game the happiness was short-lived and the optimism was guarded. The quiz was over, and next week came the real test — the fourth-rated Texas Longhorns at Austin.

When the game was over, the Cyclones were on the short end of a 17-9 score to a Texas team that lost only five starters and ended the season with a 42-0 Sun Bowl victory over Maryland.

Gillis went into the game as the nation's second leading rusher and seemed well on his way to upholding that position with 50 yards early in the second quarter. But on a fourth-and-one at the Texas 25, Gillis got the call, plunged into the Texas line, but tore ligaments in his left knee that put him on the bench. Later in the game Dan Goodwin also went out with a rib injury.

The Cyclones moved the ball well in the first half but couldn't push over the goal line and had to rely on the foot of Giffords. The freshman came through with fieldgoals of 36, 43, and 35 yards while the ISU defense held the Longhorn's "Jones boys" in check as the Cyclone's took a 9-3 halftime lead.

But in the second half, the Longhorn defense went to work, keeping the Cyclones pinned deep in their own territory, allowing them only 20 total yards and two first downs. The Texas offense managed to penetrate the stingy ISU defense for a pair of touchdowns — enough for the 17-9 win.

With the preliminaries over, the Cyclones returned to Iowa for the battle of bragging rights of the state — round three with the Iowa Hawkeyes.

For new coach Hayden Fry and the Hawks, it was an overdue victory. For the Cyclones it was a long afternoon.

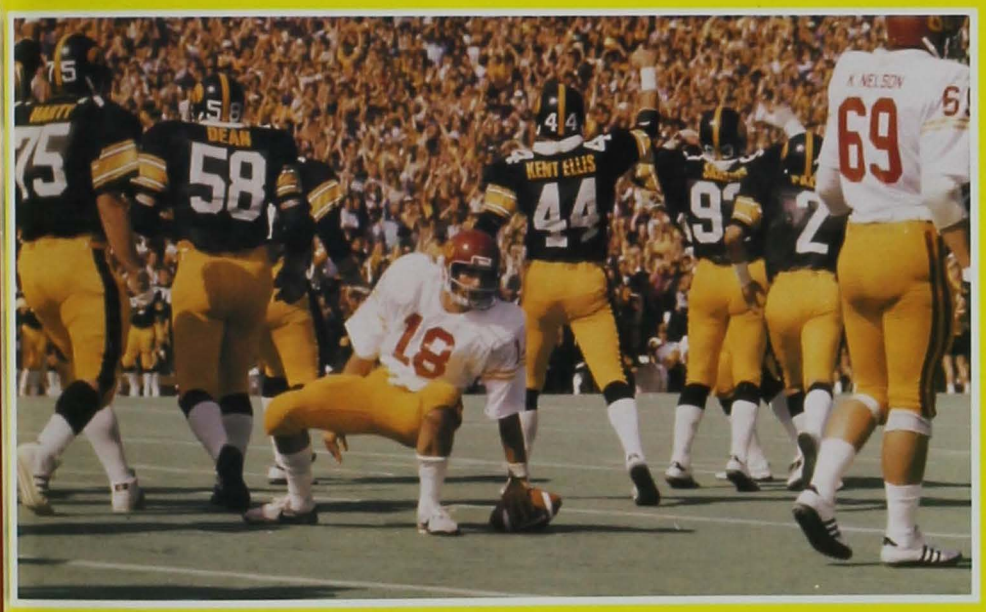
Iowa came into the contest with a misleading 0-3 record. After blowing a big lead in the season opener to Indiana, the Hawkeyes pushed Big Eight foes Oklahoma and Nebraska to the limit before losing both contests in the final quarter.

Despite losing running backs Gillis and Goodwin at Texas, the Cyclones went into the game as slight favorites. But that Saturday the Hawks — smelling victory from three near misses — were hungry for the win and pulled away for a 30-14 rout.

The man instrumental in the victory was no stranger to the Cyclones. It was Dennis Mosley's 77 yard run that gave Iowa a 12-10 win in the first rematch in 1977. But in 1979 it was Mosley left, Mosley right, Mosley up the middle — 39 times in all for a total of 229 yards.

Ambush in Iowa City

IOWA 30
IOWA STATE 14



Relying on the ISU defense, Duncan decided to take the wind and kick off. But Iowa did what neither Bowling Green or Texas had been able to do — took the opening kickoff and marched 80 yards for a quick 7-0 lead.

The Cyclone's two scores were the results of interceptions. Victor Mack tied the score on a short plunge after a Jeff Stallworth interception. Then mid-way through the third quarter Chris Boskey and Bill Herren broke through the Hawkeye offensive line, causing quarterback Pete Gales to hurry his throw. John Less picked it off and returned it 26 yards for a touchdown.

Less's score cut the Hawkeye lead to 21-14, and most of the Kinnick Stadium crowd waited and wondered if Iowa would pull their fourth quarter folding act again. But unfortunately for Cyclone fans, it was not to be.

But early in the fourth quarter, while most eyes were on Mosley, fullback Dean McKillip took the ball up the gut and bolted 27 yards to the endzone. Reggie Roby put the nails in the coffin with a 44-yard field goal.

The game was physical. Boskey labeled it a "street fight." By the time it was over, five Cyclones had to be helped off the field.

Quarterback John Quinn was the first casualty, suffering a knee injury in the first quarter. Tailback Mack went out after taking a hit from Mario Pace that caused a fumble and led to a Hawkeye touchdown. Shamus McDonough went out with a neck injury, and Joel Jenson injured an ankle. Boskey received a kick in the ribs, and eventually had to leave the game in the fourth quarter.

For the Hawkeyes and Fry it was the first victory of the season. For Duncan and the Cyclones, there would always be "next year" — and the opening of the Big Eight season.

INJURIES TAKE THEIR TOLL

Youth was the big story for ISU in the 1979 pre-season, but that was quickly overshadowed by a rash of injuries that crippled the team during the campaign. The Cyclones finished at 3-8; their 2-5 Big Eight mark left them in a tie for fifth place.

During the season, 18 starters missed at least one game due to injuries, but they were more fortunate than some. Flanker Vinnie Cerrato and pre-season All-American candidate Brian Neal were both lost for the year with knee injuries before the season began.

The tailback spot appeared to have the most depth of any position with four talented runners. But when Mike Payne was injured in the Oklahoma game, freshman quarterback Ronnie Osborne suddenly found himself playing tailback.

Knee injuries also struck All-Big Eight noseguard Chris Boskey and quarterback John Quinn, who were lost for the season. Freshman standout Shamus McDonough suffered a neck injury during the Iowa game and was out for five weeks.

The Cyclones started the season a very young team, and as the season progressed more freshmen worked their way into the lineup. Of the 55-man squad that went to Oklahoma, 22 were freshmen. At Nebraska, seven of the 22 starters were in their first year.

After being physically and mentally beat up after the Texas and Iowa games, the Cyclones played Pacific, Kansas, and Kansas State.

Embarrassing would be the best way to describe the 24-7 loss to Pacific. Even with several starters on the sidelines, most figured that it would be an easy game, and it was — for Pacific. Terry Rubley, Walter Grant, and Ronnie Osborne were all given a shot at quarterback, but none of them could move the team.

The best thing to do after the Pacific nightmare was to forget it and start anew. "What we need now is a victory, even if it is by half a point," Duncan said.

And that's about what the Cyclones got. The patch-work defense played superbly and the offense got enough for the 7-3 win over Kansas State. "It wasn't pretty, but it was a win," said Payne, who scored the game's only touchdown.

With a Big Eight win under their belts, and the early season losses behind them, the young Cyclones returned home with new life to face

Kansas.

But the Cyclones regressed to the form of the Pacific loss, being completely dominated in the 24-7 loss. ISU was spared some embarrassment when Rubley replaced Grant as quarterback and directed the team to a late touchdown.

With a 1-1 Big Eight start after playing perennial weaklings Kansas and K-State, and Oklahoma next on the docket, the future did not look bright for ISU.

There was some good news in the 38-9 drubbing at the hands of the Sooners. Alex Giffords set a school record with a 58-yard field goal, and the Cyclones found their offense and a quarterback.

Terry Rubley was no stranger to ISU. As a sophomore he finished second in the Big Eight in passing, and lead ISU to a victory over Nebraska and a berth in the Peach Bowl. But in 1978 he developed elbow troubles and lost his job to Walter Grant. With Grant returning in '79 and Quinn coming off a redshirt year, most left Rubley out of the quarterback picture. But Terry quietly waited for his chance, and when he got the opportunity, he didn't waste it. After replacing Grant late in the Kansas game, Rubley hit on 71 of 131 passes for 54 percent, and picked up 715 yards.

If Donnie Duncan and his group of young talent materialize into a winning football team, they may look back on Nov. 3 and the 24-10 victory over Colorado as the day it began.

Against Colorado, the cyclones treated the fans to something that had been missing since the opening game — offense. Goodwin returned to the tailback spot and rushed for 149 yards while Jack Seabrooke pounded out 121 yards from his fullback position. Rubley continued to lead the team at quarterback, hitting on six of 13 passes for 58 yards and rushing for another 51.

Shamus McDonough returned to the defensive line, and along with Kenny Neil, Mike Leaders, and Lou Vieceli, shut down the Colorado attack. For the first time since the Bowling Green game there were smiles after the game in No-name Stadium.

The Cyclones were home again the following week in a regionally televised game against Missouri, a team that went to the Hall of Fame Bowl.

Although trailing 12-0 at the half, the Cyclones battled back with Rubley at the helm. The ISU signal caller hit on 19 of 35 passes and outplayed Missouri's Phil Bradley. Tight end Mickey Leafblad was on the receiving end of nine of those Rubley aerials.

A Giffords field goal and Goodwin touchdown cut the Tiger lead to 12-9, and with six minutes to go, ISU was driving for the winning touchdown. With the ball on the Missouri 39 Goodwin broke through to the secondary, but was stripped of the ball, ending the ISU upset bid.

"It was like a pair of pliers going up against a forklift." That was Donnie Duncan's observation of the 34-3 loss to Nebraska. Although the undermanned Cyclones trailed the third-rate Cornhuskers 28-0 at the half they drew praise from Husker coach Tom Osborn.

"Iowa State could have quit in the second half — some teams would have just given up and it could have gotten out of hand — but it's to the credit of their players and coaches that they didn't."

If ever a game represented a year, the season-ending loss to Oklahoma State was a microcosm of the 1979 season. The Cyclones hung tough, and battled from behind, only to commit a costly turnover, and have the game slip away.

ISU tied the game late in the third quarter when Mike Payne, once again replacing an injured Dan Goodwin, bolted over from the four yard line.

Then, late in the fourth quarter, the Cyclones were on the move with victory in sight when an option pitch by Rubley bounced off the helmet of Seabrooke and was recovered by OSU.

The Cowboys worked the ball to the Iowa State 18, but as they had done all year the defense came up with the big play, sacking OSU quarterback Harold Bailey, setting up a 43 yard field goal attempt by Cowboy Colin Ankerson.

The Cyclone fans rose to their feet for a final time, cheering for the big play. But the cheers were silenced as the ball split the uprights and the Cowboys won, 13-10.

Duncan's comments on the game echoed those heard throughout the year. "I thought we gave a good effort. We had a chance to give up and we didn't."

Rubley, playing in his final game, hit on 19 of 31 passes for 229 yards. He hit eight different receivers. Seven of the completions went to freshman Jim Knuth.

For first-year coach Donnie Duncan, and ISU fans, both who had become accustomed to winning, the 3-8 season was a long one.

For the 15 seniors, the final season was a sad ending to their football careers. But most had their turn in the spotlight, playing in the Peach and Hall of Fame Bowls. With the young talent improving with each game, and 14 full-time starters returning, chances are that Duncan and those underclassmen will some day get their chance for the spotlight.

After losing five All-American wrestlers in Don Finnegan, Mike Land, Kelly Ward, Dave Powell and Tom Walden, head wrestling coach Harold Nichols was left with a young squad that could include up to six freshmen in the starting lineup by the end of the season.

With injuries to Dave Allen and Mike Mann, who both placed in the national meet in 1978-79, and Tim Berrier, who is coming off a redshirt season, the Cyclones lost to Arizona State and finished a disappointing seventh in the Arizona Invitational in Tucson.

The Cyclones then beat Arizona and Missouri before they hosted the ISU Invitational.

No team scores were kept because coaches were allowed to make multiple entries in each weight class. Iowa State finished with five champions.

The winners were: Dan Samaniego, 118 lbs.; Nate Carr, 150 lbs.; Tom Pickard, 158 lbs.; Dave Zimmerman, 167 lbs.; and John Forshee, 190 lbs.

The Cyclone wrestlers ignored their early season rating of No. 10 as they tested their top-ranked rival — the Iowa Hawkeyes — Jan. 5, 1980 at the Hilton Coliseum.

Despite good shows from the low and middle weight Cyclone wrestlers, the Hawks came through with victories in the last three matches to win the meet, 23-17.

The Cyclones came back from the loss to beat three other nationally-rated teams the next week. First came a 25-12 win over No. 6 Wisconsin.

Next, the victory over second-rated Lehigh marked a milestone in Coach Harold Nichols' career — marking his 400th victory as a coach.

Heavyweight Dave Osenbaugh and 167-pounder Perry Hummel registered pins in the Lehigh victory. Hummel, a freshman coming off a redshirt year, brought his season record to 29-2 with the fall.

The Cyclones, the rated fourth nationally, met No. 10 Kentucky and beat them, 27-11.

By midway through the season, seven members of the 1979-80 ISU wrestling team were picked as potential All-Americans by Amateur Wrestling News.

The publication's staff did not pick any Cyclones to win at the NCAA Championships, but Perry Hummel and Mike Mann were listed second at 167 and 190 pounds, respectively.

Hummel's 36-2-2 record was the team's best and Mann maintained a 20-3 standing.

Other members of the fourth-rated Cyclone squad selected as mid-season All-Americans included Dave Brown and Dave Allen, fourth; Nate Carr, fifth; Mike Picozzi, sixth; and Tom Pickard, eighth.

Steve Carr and Jim Gibbons were both given honorable mention.

The 1979-80 season could be the year for the Cyclone gymnasts. Ranked number one in the early season polls, coach Ed Gagnier said that ISU had the best shot at the national title since they won it for the third time in 1974.

It seems only fitting that ISU should win the championship. With a powerful team in recent years, they were frustrated by an NCAA rule that allowed only one team per conference into the national meet. Two years ago they finished second in the Big Eight to eventual national champion Oklahoma.

Then in 1978, the rule was changed to allow two teams from each region into the finals, but Nebraska burst onto the scene as a gymnastics power. Finishing third behind the Cornhuskers and Sooners, ISU was once again left out of the national finals.

But in 1979 the tide turned in favor of the Cyclones. The addition of Ron Galimore, and another NCAA rule change made ISU a good bet to live up to their number one ranking.

The new rule allows the top five performances in each event to count in the total score. "This tends to suit our type of team very well," Gagnier said, "We have strong depth."

Another plus for ISU was the addition of Galimore, a two-time national champion transfer from Louisiana State. Galimore has buoyed an already strong Cyclone line-up.

"Galimore has been our all-around leader, but he has excellent talent behind him," said Gagnier. "The depth is quality depth. In fact Tom Hardin has finished ahead of Galimore twice this year.

In addition to Galimore and Hardin, Gagnier is depending on other all-arounders Mike Lyons, Stacey Maloney, and Doug Smidl for most of the scoring punch.

The season opened on a bright note as the Cyclones scored 274.25 points in the intersquad meet, setting an NCAA scoring record. "I've never had a team so excited about a meet," said Gagnier. "Not even on a national championship team."

Iowa State quickly asserted themselves as the top team in the country by winning the Big Eight Invitational. ISU defeated last year's national champion, Nebraska, 269.40-263.60.

Then, during a Thanksgiving trip to Chicago the Cyclones proved they were worthy of their top ranking with two big wins.

Iowa State won the Windy City Invitational, generally regarded as the top gymnastics meet in the country. Once again the Cyclones defeated Nebraska as Ron Galimore won the all-around.

A week later in the Midwest Open the Cyclones were clear winners even though no team points were kept. ISU swept the top three all-around places and 16 of the 48 finalists were Cyclones. Galimore once again took all-around honors with a score of 55.60. He was followed by Mike Lyons (54.60) and Stacy Maloney (54.45).

It was a big week for Galimore. The junior stand-out was the all-around champion at both meets, won the floor exercise and vaulting championships in both, and the parallel bar at the Windy City. Galimore's winning vault at the Midwest was a perfect 10.

On Dec. 15, the Cyclones broke their own NCAA scoring mark by racking up 279.10 points in a dual meet with Minnesota. That is an average of over 9.3 on each event.

Iowa State once again met Nebraska during a triangular that included Oklahoma. The Cornhuskers got revenge, as ISU mistakes on the pommel horse cost them the meet. Nebraska scored 275.70, followed by ISU's 273.40, and Oklahoma's 269.50.

The two teams met twice more after the Bomb deadline in February. The Big Eight Championships were held in Ames on March 7-8, and the NCAA finals in Lincoln on April 3-5.

"10"

The Selling of a Gymnastics Team

When Ron Galimore performed one of his Tsukahara vaults at the finals of the Windy City meet, coach Ed Gagnier thought he had made it. "If they don't give him a 10 for that, he'll never get one," Gagnier said he thought to himself at the time. The judges gave him a 9.95. It seemed a perfect 10.0 was impossible.

Davonche T. "Ron" Galimore was about to prove his coach wrong, and prove to the country that he is one of the top gymnasts in the U.S.

A week later Galimore and the Cyclones participated in the Midwest Open. There were six events going on at one time as Galimore stood at the end of the runway, preparing for one of his preliminary vaults.

Gagnier described it like this: "All of a sudden, as if by some mysterious signal, the crowd got quiet and all eyes were on Galimore."

He sprinted down the runway and sprung off the vaulting horse, into a Tsukahara with a full twist — a cartwheel into a back somersault.

After the vault, Galimore knew he had hit it, and the crowd knew it too. It was now up to the judges. "That was the greatest piece of gymnastics I'd ever done," Galimore said, "I felt as if I had total control of the vault. It was like someone had put my feet down for me."

The Chicago crowd began chanting, "10, 10, 10," as Galimore stood with his teammates awaiting the judges score.

Suddenly the crowd erupted as the score flashed onto the board, Galimore was hoisted to the shoulders of his teammates. He had attained the ultimate in gymnastics — a perfect 10.0.

"In my coaching at Iowa State, I've never seen a score of 10 before," said Gagnier, who has been with the Cyclones since 1963. In fact Galimore's accomplishment hasn't been done in a major meet in this country in his lifetime.

How do you follow a perfect score? "It was like a dream," said Galimore, "But I won't sit back. The main thing right now is to win a team national championship."

Jeff Mitts

Most Iowa sports fans would have little trouble with jargon like "double-dribble" or "takedown." But throw an "iron cross" or "tuskahara" into the conversation and you will probably clam up most sports buffs.

But around Iowa State those words have a little more meaning due to the efforts of Ed Gagnier and the ISU gymnastics team.

Gymnastics does not yet have the fan following of football, basketball, or even wrestling. But if Gagnier and the team continue their work, gymnastics may find its way to the cheering crowds and newspaper headlines.

Gagnier has used the halftime at ISU basketball games to get exposure for his top-ranked gymnastics, and at the same time educate the crowd on the basic movements of the sport. The programs this year featured the rings, high bar, and tumbling. The gymnasts went through their moves as Gagnier explained them to the crowd.

The demonstrations were a success. The gymnasts left the floor to a standing ovation from the Hilton crowd, and the next home meet, a dual with Kansas on Jan. 19, drew 3,600 people.

It was the second largest crowd to watch the gymnasts perform in Hilton, and not too many people less than attended the basketball game earlier in the day.

Gymnastics is blooming as a fresh new sport for the cold winter months. And with continued success, the "iron cross" and "tuskahara" may join "double-dribble" and "takedown" in the ISU sports vernacular.

For the women gymnasts, the 1979-80 season was plagued with problems similiar to several other ISU athletic teams — youth and injuries.

The list of injuries read much the same as the list of leading performers. Freshman Bonnie Gagnier, with a score of 8.80 was the team leader on the uneven parallel bars, but missed three weeks with a broken hand.

Janice Hampton, the team's leading vaulter, suffered from ankle and wrist problems and sat out the final half of the season. One of the top balance beam performers, Sue Van Erdt, suffered a knee injury and was also lost for the year.

One gymnast who managed to avoid injuries was co-captain Meg Davis. She was the leading performer on the balance beam with an 8.60, and also had the top all-around score of 33.65.

But the injuries did have some positive effect.

"The rest of the team really pulled together," said first-year head coach Donna Kramer. "The young kids performed well under the circumstances."

Iowa State was a freshman dominated team, and many of them got into action earlier than they had planned when the veteran performers were hurt.

"The freshmen were given an opportunity to perform earlier than expected," said Kramer. "It would have been better if they had more of a chance to develop, but there is nothing like experience."

By the Bomb deadline in mid-February the Cyclones had a 3-2 dual meet record with wins over Southern Illinois, Colorado State, and Iowa. Their best performance was a 129.375 output against Iowa.

Robert Estes, Chuck Harmison and Dean Uthoff led the ISU men's basketball team in all statistics through the first four games of the 1979-80 season.

Estes, the high scorer in three games, averaged 20.8 points and Harmison followed with a 13.5 average.

All-time ISU rebound record-holder Uthoff was closing in on Bill Bridges' all-time Big Eight record in December, after setting the ISU mark in the Cyclones' loss to Drake.

The season opener was a 93-71 victory over St. Cloud State at home. Harmison led in both categories with 18 points and 15 rebounds.

Estes scored 20 points in an encouraging 87-77 loss at Notre Dame. This was a chance for the Cyclones to see how they could fare against a nationally-rated power.

Back at home, the team beat Missouri-Kansas City 121-82 before suffering a disappointing 87-66 loss to Drake in Des Moines.

The Iowa State basketball program took on a whole new look midway through their 1979-80 Big Eight season when Coach Lynn Nance was released from his contract Jan. 29, 1980.

Nance had asked to be released from his contract and he settled with the University by payment of $35,000. Rick Samuels and Reggie Warford, his full-time assistants, took over the team as co-coaches.

"On Jan. 15 I met with Dr. Parks and discussed the basketball program at Iowa State at great length," Nance said in a prepared statement following his release. "I expressed to him at that time my feeling that for various reasons I didn't feel the Iowa State basketball program was going to be able to reach the goals my staff and I had set."

Bob Fowler, who transferred to ISU with Nance from Kentucky, quit the team following Nance's last game, a 69-60 victory over Oklahoma State. Fowler came to the following practice, but had played in an AAU game and was ineligible for the rest of the season.

At the time of Nance's departure, the Cyclones were 8-10 overall and 2-4 in the Big Eight. They lost their next four games, though play was improved.

Chuck Harmison led the team in scoring with 12.5 points per game in 22 starts. Robert Estes, who was the leading scorer early in the season was second with an 11.7 average, Dean Uthoff was also consistently in double figures with a 10.9 average.

Uthoff, Harmison and Estes also led the team in rebounds. Uthoff pulled down an average of 9.0 a game and Harmison and Estes followed with 6.3 and 5.5, respectively.

More than once during the 1979-80 season, ISU center Dean Uthoff broke barrier that put his name in basketball record books.

But of all the nights he broke records, Dec. 20, 1979 will probably remain in his mind the longest. Because on that night, in a 76-73 victory over the Eastern Montana Yellowjackets, the senior became the Big Eight converence's all-time leading rebounder.

Former Kansas Star Bill Bridges' mark of 1,081 fell early in the fourth quarter.

Just one game earlier, Uthoff had joined Bridges and former ISU star Don Smith as the only three players to have recorded both 1,000 points and 1,000 rebounds in their collegiate careers.

After two weeks of conference play, Uthoff led the conference in rebounds with 9.8 per game.

Women Find a Home in Hilton

It was a young and improving Iowa State women's basketball team that headed into the Big Eight tournament in mid-January with a 6-6 record.

With only one senior on the squad, sixth-year head coach Lynn Wheeler relied heavily on sophomores and juniors, as the Cyclones got off to a sluggish start.

After crushing Southwest Missouri State 77-32 in the season opener, ISU dropped three in a row, including road games at Arkansas and William Penn.

The home opener was a sloppy affair. The Cyclones committed 40 turnovers in the 78-53 loss to Minnesota. For the first time, all home games were played in Hilton Coliseum. The 14,000 seat arena had about 13,900 empty seats.

The women got a boost in early December when they won the Peach Basket Invitational at Northern Iowa. The Cyclones topped Northern Iowa 80-57, then defeated Nebraska-Omaha 79-64 in the title game.

The ISU run-and-gun offense finally fell into place as the turnovers were reduced and the Cyclones took control of the boards. "We learned to shoot better," said Wheeler, commenting on the tournament. "We put the ball up enough times to give ourselves a chance to win."

Iowa State continued its winning ways with a 99-73 pasting of Grand View. Guards Tracy Eckert and Carol Schleihs lead the way, combining for 42 points — each hitting career high 21 points. Eckert also broke her own single-game assist record as she dished out 14.

The fourth win in a row was an 80-69 victory over Iowa. The game was the first of a doubleheader with the men and revenged last years loss to the Hawkeyes.

Missouri ended the ISU winning streak, thumping the Cyclones 81-58. Drake then whipped ISU 91-72.

Although in the middle of a slump, the Cyclones kept on scrapping. Tracy Eckert, Sue Reitsma, and Mary Michalski scramble for the ball while Karen Wiese watches, above. Jim Wilcox

1980 began on a positive note with a 68-66 victory over Illinois. Carol Schleihs sank three free throws in the final minute to insure the win.

Iowa State looked good in a 71-62 loss to 12th ranked Kansas. The Cyclones held a one point lead at halftime, as they held two-time all-American Lynette Woodward to five points. But Woodward and Kansas battled back in the second half for the victory.

But from there things went from bad to worse as ISU dropped ten straight games, and saw their season record drop to 6-15 by mid February.

Iowa State finished last in the Big Eight conference tournament, losing to Kansas State 80-66, Oklahoma 87-77, and Nebraska 93-72.

The slump was illustrated when the Cyclones lost to two teams they had beaten earlier in the season.

Iowa State defeated UNO 79-64 to win the Peach Basket Invitational, but in February UNO turned the tables with a 73-61 win. Iowa also avenged an earlier loss by defeating the Cyclones.

One of the bright spots for Iowa State was the play of Mary Michalski. The freshman from Kansas City began to assert herself as a top scorer and rebounder, hitting a career high 24 points in the Big Eight tournament against Oklahoma.

Before the final deadline the Cyclones dropped games to the University of South Dakota 69-68, and Northwest Missouri State 77-68.

The Iowa State men's swim team was ahead of schedule after their third dual meet of the 1979-80 season and the Southern Illinois Invitational.

Rolf Meyer set one pool record and another meet record while the Cyclones had rolled to a 2-1 dual record and placed second in the Salukis' 18-team meet. The long-distance swimmer set a pool record in the 1000-meter freestyle against Nebraska and a meet record in the 500-meter freestyle against Minnesota.

Jim Barron had an excellent meet against Nebraska, winning three events — the 200-meter breaststroke, the 200-meter individual medley and the 400-meter medley relay. Jay Leigh also had a pair of wins.

ISU defeated the Cornhuskers and the Gophers, but lost to Wisconsin 60-53. With three duals left in the season, the Cyclones were looking for strong performances in the Big Eight and NCAA Championships in March, 1980.

With three meets left in the 1979-80 season, the Iowa State women's swim team had compiled a 6-1 dual meet record and had their high finishes in invitational meets.

The team beat Iowa, Western Illinois, Illinois, Minnesota, Missouri and Illinois State and lost only to Nebraska in dual competition. The lady Cyclone swimmers also won the Minnesota Invitational, and placed second in the Cyclone Relays and the Saluki Invitational.

A core of eight team members set most of the team records during the season. Freshman Lynn Ellis headed up the team setting records in 11 events as she competed in the freestyle, butterfly and individual medley races, and on two relay teams.

Others setting more than three team records during the season include: Annette Ackerson, freestyle and relay teams; Elaine Roy, freestyle and relay teams; Theresa Morse, backstroke and relay teams; Sue Wyatt, breaststroke and relay teams; and Maryann Eadie, diving.

Five returning players and three freshmen who alternated in starting positions broke the ISU record for wins in volleyball during the 1979 season.

The team finished at 27-29-3, six wins ahead of any previous ISU team. They finished in fourth place in three tournaments: The Big Eight Championships, the Central Missouri State Invitational and the Missouri-St. Louis Invitational.

They also won the consolation bracket at the Minnesota Invitational and beat Drake twice in dual competition.

Coach Sharon Hitsman, in her second year at ISU, will have nearly the same team next season as none of the starters on the 1979 team were seniors.

"I thought we did really well this year," Hitsman said. "We had some injuries at some pretty critical times, but the girls held up real well. We had lots of positive comments from other coaches. I think we'll be a real contender for the regional and Big Eight titles next year."

Sports clubs at Iowa State may double in number by the end of the school year, according to Al Murdoch, ISU Sports Club Council adviser.

Murdoch said 20 clubs were active in early December, but 15-20 more were in the forming process.

The sports club program at ISU is already among the top five in the country, according to a survey by the National Intramural Recreational Sports Association. The programs were ranked according to total number of participants, total budget and hours of participation.

Among the most popular clubs at ISU are the mountaineering, skiing, fencing, rugby, soccer, hockey and martial arts clubs, Murdoch said.

Members of the various sports clubs pay quarterly dues to supplement a $38,000 allocation from GSB (Government of the Student Body).

Murdoch is also adviser to the ISU Hockey Club. There were 60 members in 1979-80.

The club, although it doesn't compete on a varsity level, holds the Big Eight Championship title for 1978-79. All Big Eight teams are actually sports clubs rather than school-sponsored sports, Murdoch said.

Many of the 32 games the hockey club played during the 1979-80 season were regular Central State Collegiate Hockey League games, but Murdoch said there were a number of exhibition games on the schedule, too.

There were 12 returning players and 13 rookies on the 1979-80 A team. Murdoch listed Bill Stover, Mike Flynn, Shaun Elder and Paul Hamilton as leaders.

"We've set some pretty big goals for this year," Murdoch said. "We're looking to repeat the Big Eight Championship title; win the league title and have a winning season."

Men's golf coach Dale Anderson doesn't limit his interests to one sport; he is also advisor of the Cyclone Sabres, the ISU fencing club.

The Sabres are one of the oldest sports clubs at ISU. The group was founded in 1960 and has been under Anderson's supervision since he came to Iowa State in 1967.

Anderson said he knew little about fencing when he first became advisor to the group, but learned right along with the students in the fencing classes.

The Cyclone Sabres serve a number of functions. Not only do members participate in various levels of competitions, but they can also receive academic credit for participation, through independent study.

Anderson said Fencing I students learn the basics of fencing, including foot movement, blade handling and judgement. He also said Cyclone Sabres work to improve technique in these same areas.

Karate club involves 110, martial arts interest up

More than 200 students and ISU faculty members are involved in various university martial arts clubs. Of these 110 are members of the ISU Karate Club, a group that is involved in many competitions and demonstrations.

The group is instructed and advised by Yong Chin Pak, who also teaches the martial arts classes at the University. The classes are offered through the physical education department.

Pak said that although there are actually 110 members in Karate Club, there are approximately 150 who work out with the group.

Pak said the group is made up of both beginners and advanced students. He said that about 80 of the club members are beginners.

Self defense, interest and physical shape are three reasons why people become involved in Tae Kwon Do, according to Pak. He also said that some people become involved to improve their self-confidence.

The art of Tae Kwon Do do two main moves, kicks and punches. Pak said 70 per cent of the moves involve the kick.

Members of the Karate Club placed third in an AAU meet held in Omaha in October.

Intramurals Everyone?

Men and women mix it up during co-rec flag football in the fall, above. Laney Lass

For most high school athletes, graduation brings the end of their athletic careers. Only the most talented are able to participate in college sports.

The Iowa State intramural program gives the ex-high school letterman — as well as the casual athlete — a chance to participate in team and individual sports.

The I.M. program, coordinated by John Meyer and Linda Marticke, offers 40 different athletic activities with men's, women's and co-rec divisions. According to Meyer, participation is high with approximately 14,000 students involved in at least one activity. Many are active in more than one sport, making the total competitors nearly 28,000.

Softball drew the most participants, with 400 teams entered in the various division in 1979. "With each team consisting of nine or 10 regulars, plus substitutes, you're talking about 4,000-plus students," said Meyer.

Basketball attracts the greatest number of teams with 550, but volleyball and football are not far behind in popularity, according to Meyer.

The I.M. program not only provides competition for thousands of athletes, but also provides salaries for hundreds of student referees. Each quarter about 300 part-time workers are hired and trained to officiate sports.

Meyer said the ISU intramural program compares favorably to others across the country. "Quality and quantity-wise, we rate in the top 20 in the nation, possibly in the top 10 with schools of our size."

Funding for intramurals comes from students and the University. Each quarter $1.30 from each student's fees go into the intramural budget. This amounts to nearly $90,000 which is matched by the University. 70 percent of this is allocated for salaries, and the rest for equipment and office supplies.

Each spring break hundreds of Iowa State students flee the books and classrooms for a week of vacation. While some travel to Florida or the Southwest to escape the cold and snow, others can't get enough of it and head for the Rocky Mountains.

During the final week of February Colorado's white slopes are sprinkled with cardinal and gold stocking caps as the invasion of ISU students takes place.

Breckenridge, located about 70 miles west of Denver in the heart of Colorado's ski country, bears the brunt of the ISU invasion. Condominiums like Gold Camp, Claimjumper, and Mountainwood take on the look of Iowa State Dormitories. September and October reservations are necessary to get a room.

And the night spots don't suffer from the visitors from ISU. Days on the slope were topped off by evenings at H. P. Cassidy's, Miners Camp, and Ore Bucket.

In Breckenridge's top mountains and 770 acres of trails, there are several resorts within easy driving range. Arapahoe Basin, Keystone, Copper Mountain, Vail, and Winter Park all get their shares of ISU skiers.

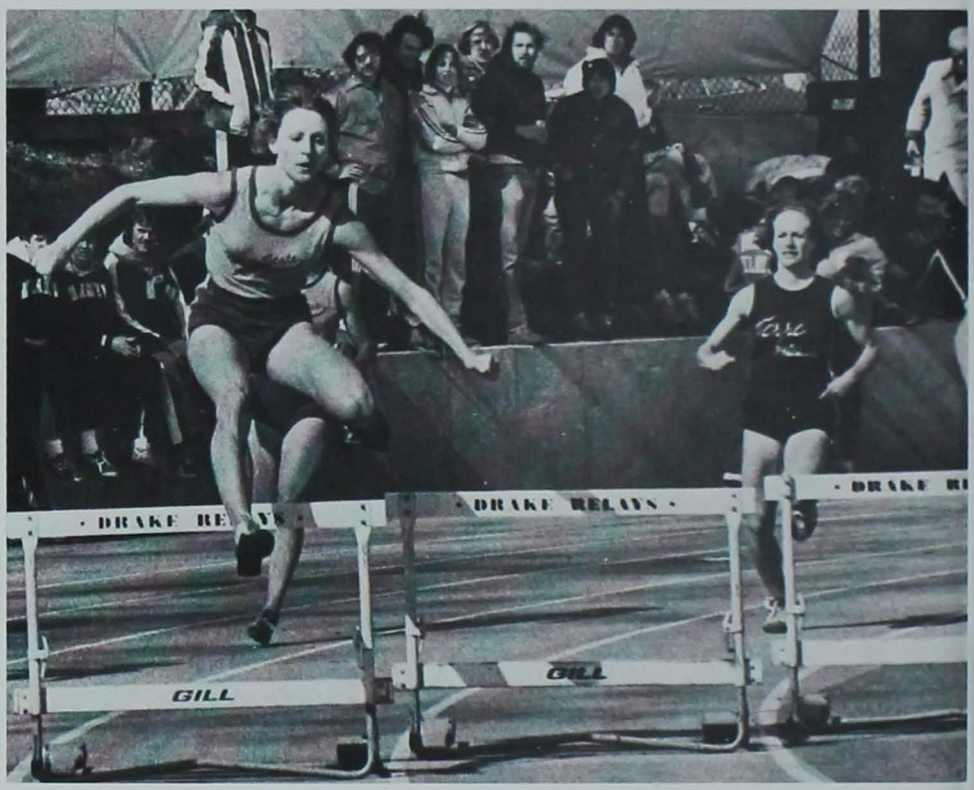
FEMALE ATHLETE OF THE YEAR

Debbie Esser



Four time All-American Debbie Esser finished competing on the collegiate level in the spring of 1979, but her name will remain on ISU record books for many years to come.

Esser, who graduated in fall 1980, became the first athlete ever to win four consecutive national AIAW titles when she won the 400-meter hurdle title in May, 1979.

Winning the title in 56.63 seconds, Esser set a new school record and came within .02 of the national record.

Other achievements the Woodbine, Iowa native made at ISU include four Big Eight and there Drake Relays titles in the same event.

She has also competed in a number of international competitions representing the United States.

Because of these achievements, Esser has been named the Bomb '80 female athlete of the year.

Dean Uthoff

The week of Dec. 16, 1979 was a record-breaking one for Dean Uthoff, but it was four steady years of performances that brought "Ute" to the top of the Big Eight record books.

His stuff-shot against Mississippi State on Dec. 18 gave him his 1,000th career point, coupled with his 1,000th rebound gathered in the first game of the season, he became only the third player in Big Eight history to score both 1,000 points and grab 1,000 rebounds.

The next game he became the Big Eight's all-time leading rebounder, passing Bill Bridges' total of 1,081 — all of this with two-thirds of the season to play. By the time the season is over he will most likely move into fifth place on the all-time ISU scoring list.

Playing in every ISU game, the 6-11 Cedar Rapids Jefferson product has averaged in double figures in both scoring and rebounding in each of his four years.

Head coach Lynn Nance called Uthoff, "the best center in the history of Iowa State."

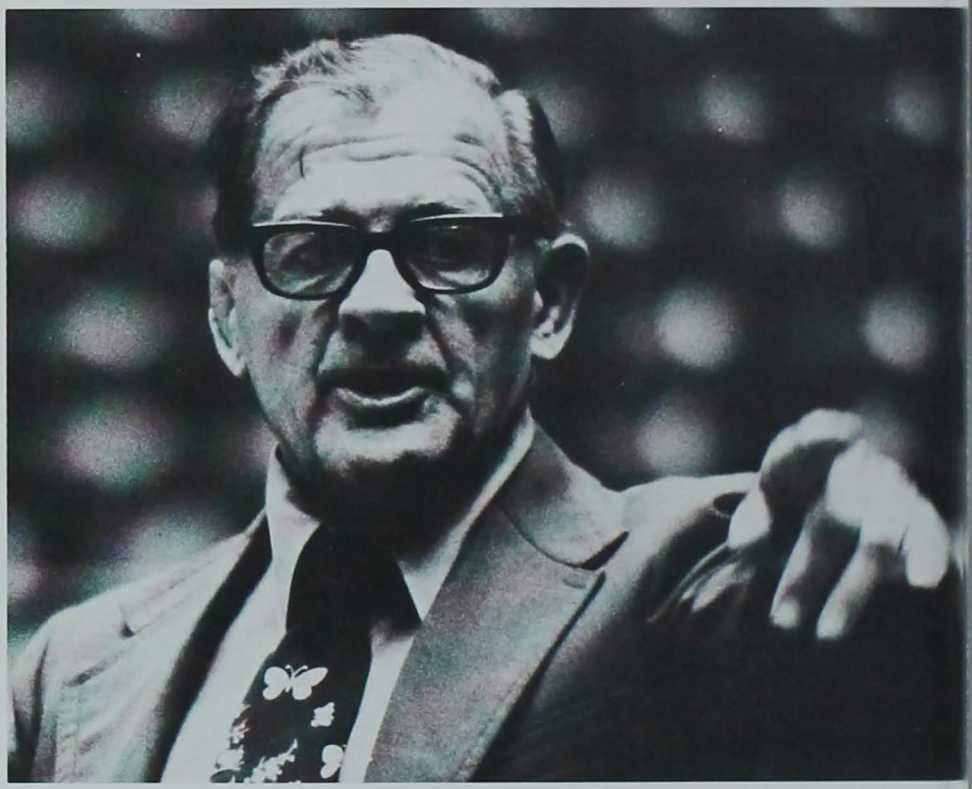
COACH OF THE YEAR

Harold Nichols



Because he has a career coaching record with more than 400 wins, and because his teams have won six national titles and been runners up ten times and because he has coached 32 individual national champions and 73 Big Eight Champions — Iowa State head wrestling coach Harold Nichols has been honored by many athletic organizations.

In 1979, he was named to the Wrestling Hall of Fame, which is sponsored by the United States Wrestling Foundation. Four times he has been named national Coach of the Year.

Nichols is in his 27th season at ISU and his composite record of 354-49-10 makes his percentage of wins an .869.

In his years at ISU, Nichols has coached four teams to perfect seasons in dual competition and six others to one-loss campaigns.

Since the NCAA championships began in 1957, only one Nichols team has placed below fourth.

SPORTS UPDATE

Because of a final deadline early in February, many winter and early spring sports do not receive complete coverage in the Bomb. The following information concerns contests held after February 1979.

WOMEN'S TRACK

The 1979 indoor women's track team won both the Big Eight and National Invitational meets after a 2-1 dual season.

The Cyclones won three event titles at the national meet as the distance medley relay team of Debbie Esser, Evelyn McMeekin, Diane Vetter and Debbie Vetter's 11:39.39 set a new American Indoor record in the event.

Debbie Vetter also set a record for the Hearnes Center track in Columbia, Mo. when she won the 1,000-yard run in 2:29.81.

Laurie Eder, Esser, Ellie Mahal and Sumeta Wells also won the mile relay in 3:47.06.

The 4 x 220-yard relay team of Eder, Mahal, Lorene Spearman, and Wells finished second. Mary Seybold and Diane Vetter both placed third; Seybold in the 3-mile run and Vetter in the 1,000-yard run.

MEN'S TRACK

The 1979 men's indoor track team went undefeated in dual competition for the second year in a row.

John Scheetz won the Big Eight shot put title with a throw of 60-6½ and was among six Cyclones who qualified for the NCAA indoor track meet.

Scheetz finished ninth in the shot put nationally and the distance medley relay team of Steve Petrie, Mike Blasingame, David Korir and Richard Kaitany finished seventh at the NCAA meet.

In the Big Eight Indoor Championships, Scheetz and Locke finished first and second in the shot put.

Korir received second place honors in the 1,000-yard run at the Big Eight meet.

The team also had three fourth-place individual titles. They belonged to Jim Solus, long jump; Gene McGivern, 2-mile run; and Tom Pratt, pole vault.

The team finished fifth in the Big Eight Indoor Championships.

Ann Gramlich

WRESTLING

Iowa State won the Big Eight Championship, placed second in the NCAA Wrestling Championships and finished 18-3 in dual meet competition in 1978-79.

Five Cyclones won individual Big Eight titles as the team rolled up 81¾ points in the competition at Hilton Coliseum. Oklahoma State was second — more than 15 points behind at 65¾.

Individual champions included: Don Finnegan, 118 lbs.; Mike Land, 134 lbs.; Kelly Ward, 158 lbs.; Dave Powell, 167 lbs.; and Tom Waldon, heavyweight.

Other Cyclones who placed were Dave Brown, third at 142 lbs.; Dave Allen, third at 177 lbs.; and Mike Mann, second at 190 lbs.

Ward also won the NCAA individual title at 158 after finishing second two years in a row. Land lost the championship match at 134 to place second. The defending champion at 126 lbs. ended his career at 174-9-1 after a 33-1 season.

Powell and Allen placed third in the NCAA meet at 167 and 177 lbs., respectively. Finnegan was fifth at 118 and Mann and Waldon finished seventh at 190 and heavyweight.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Although the ISU women's basketball team won the Lady Badger Invitational in Madison, Wisconsin, placed second in the Grand View Invitational and third in the Iowa AIAW Tournament, the 1978-79 team finished the season at 10-19 and placed seventh in the Big Eight Tournament — losing to Missouri, Oklahoma State and Oklahoma.

Gileen Gleason led the team offensively with 302 points for a 10.4 points per game average. Sue Reitsma was close behind with 282 points and a 10.1 points per game average.

Karry Crafton had 199 rebounds for the season.

MEN'S SWIMMING

The 1978-79 men's swim team took second in the Big Eight after finishing 5-4 in dual meet competition.

The Cyclones' only loss in the first part of the season was to Wyoming. They beat Kansas, Missouri, Colorado and Nebraska.

After beating Oklahoma State 66-45, the team lost to Minnesota 73-40, Wisconsin 65-48 and Iowa 70-41.

WOMEN'S GYMNASTICS

Sue Van Ert and Laurie Keck lead the 1978-79 ISU women's gymnastics team as they both placed in two events at the AIAW regional championships.

Van Ert, who was also the state AIAW champion on the beam, placed fourth on the beam and sixth in floor exercise at regionals. Keck was eighth in floor exercise and tenth on the beam at regionals.

The team went 4-1-1 in dual competition and placed fifth of five in the Big Eight Championships, second of four in the Iowa AIAW Championships and fifth of eight teams in the AIAW Region 6 Championships.

WOMEN'S SWIMMING

Theresa Morse's 28.13 in the 50-yard backstroke set an ISU record and snared her a 27th-place finish in the 1979 National AIAW swim meet.

Morse, the 1979 Big Eight 50-yard backstroke champion, also won the 50, 100 and 200-yard backstroke races at the regional championships.

Other ISU swimmers who qualified for the national meet were Annette Ackerson, who finished 33rd in the 50-yard backstroke, and Mary Ann Eadie, who placed 29 of 82 in one-meter diving.

Sue Wyatt won the 50-yard breaststroke at the Big Eight Championships in 32.14 seconds. She also won the 50, 100 and 200-yard breaststroke races at the regional meet.

The team went 4-1 in dual competition.

The lady Cyclone swimmers won the six-team Iowa AIAW Championships, placed fifth among seven in the Big Eight Championships and finished second of nine teams in the Region 6 AIAW Championships.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

The ISU men's basketball team ended the 1978-79 season at 11-16 overall, but the Cyclones were 7-7 in regular Big Eight conference play.

Andrew Parker's 20.3 points per game average was the team's offensive high. Parker scored the team high in seven of the 27 games and totalled 548 points for the season.

Dean Uthoff lead the team in rebounds with an average 11.3 a game, for a total of 307 rebounds during the season. He was second in total points at 276 for an average of 10.2 points a game.

MEN'S GYMNASTICS

After a 7-2-1 finish in dual competition, the 1978-79 men's gymnastics team came up with a pair of third place finishes in the Big Eight and NCCA regional championship competitions.

The finishes behind Nebraska and Oklahoma did not qualify the team for the national meet, but sophomores Bob Krause and Doug Smidl qualified as individuals.

Krause finished 25th on the pommel horse and Smidl, who competed in both the parallel bars and all-around competition, placed 15th in both events.

Redshirted Ron Galimore, a transfer from LSU, broke three ISU records in open competition. He scored a 54.20 in compulsory all-around, a 9.70 in compulsory floor exercise and a 9.45 in compulsory parallel bars.

Grossman:
Star Professor

Students and teaching are very important parts of Allen Grossman's role at Iowa State University. Grossman, astronomy professor says he enjoys looking into students' eyes. "You feel more of a personal contact with them and get a picture of whether or not they understand," he said.

Grossman teaches Astronomy 151, 152, 153, physics help sessions and a few graduate courses. He doesn't mind that some people consider 100 level astronomy courses "easy science credit."

Astronomy may be the "one science class students will take and I will convince students that they can understand. I guarantee they can understand," he said.

Grossman said astronomy is a useful class for many people but he doesn't recommend that everyone become an astronomy major. As a profession, there are few areas where astronomy jobs are available, he said. Astronomy graduates may teach at a university, work for NASA or research. Grossman received a PhD from Indiana University and began teaching at ISU in 1969.

Non-science people should take a basic astronomy class because they become the voters and taxpayers, he said. Students should learn to appreciate scientists and understand the environment, he said.

Grossman said he would do anything to get students' attention. He believes a student will better understand if material is presented in an interesting way.

When teaching he doesn't rely on a blackboard to indicate what is important. If the feedback he receives when explaining something is a room full of blank faces, Grossman will use something they can relate to — students themselves. He takes students out of their seats and tells them they are stars, or "starlets" as he calls the girls, and tries to recreate how they would function in the sky. Or, he will draw stars on the walls when the blackboard does not have enough space.

Sometimes he says students are often too shy to ask questions. Grossman then asks questions, creating a game show atmosphere. "What is the altitude of the North Star?" he asks. Someone in the third row finally answered him. "Fantastic! You win a trip to Acapulco," Grossman said.

Grossman demonstrates how to use the zenith of a star, above. Randy Catron

"Research which keeps the university a storehouse of society's knowledge. I feel it makes a better teacher." He said excellence in research is demanded in the physics department, which includes astronomy. All professors must "publish or perish" he said. Volumes of Grossman's published material lining his office attests to that.

Grossman himself has an interesting research job. He is employed by NASA, in cooperation with ISU. His research contract permits him to teach during the school year and spend summers at the Ames Research Center in Mountainview, Calif. His most recent project entails doing theoretical studies of the evolution of Jupiter and Saturn. He is also researching the evolution of the atmosphere.

Computers play a major role in running the University

Many students are familiar with the computers used for computer science classes and those used to grade tests, but few ever hear of the other computers, the ones that virtually run the university.

Wayne Ostendorf is the director of the Administrative Data Processing (ADP) Center located in Pearson. It is the place that handles every thing from grades to parking fines.

The ADP Center is seldom heard of, Ostendorf said, because of security reasons. If more people knew about it there might be a few who would come in to try and change a grade, he said. But, he added, there have been no problems so far.

These computers also handle student records, the university payroll, accounting, meal tickets, library circulation and fines, registration of cars, assignment of dorm rooms, inventories, financial aid, alumni records and student scheduling and registration, Ostendorf said. He also said the computer center acts as an extension division of the university. They keep records for the Dairy Herd Improvement Association, 4-H clubs and have contact with all the county extension offices in the state.

"All of the data we have belongs to other people," Ostendorf said. "We just make it available for the users." The users include the state, the university and others. All offices pay for the use of the computers, he said.

To store all of this information there are two computers (in case one breaks down), 4000 computer programs and 75 employees to handle the work. The ADP Center has also installed 70 terminals around campus so an instructor can change a student's grade in a matter of seconds or find out any other confidential information.

International Opportunities at EO Building

"It's amazing how many people come in and say they didn't know this place existed," said Dorothy Foley of the office of International Educational Services (OIES) building at Iowa State.

Foley is the assistant coordinator of International Educational Services, which is housed in the EO Building. It is a small building situated between Beardshear and Carver.

The OIES offers students opportunities to travel and study abroad, but it has many other programs. There are 15 study abroad programs offered by Iowa State plus numerous other programs offered in cooperation with other institutions, Foley said. The OIES also offers internships in other countries in cooperation with a student's studies. Most of the internships available now are located in Great Britain, she said.

Many students not only want to study in a foreign country, but want to transfer to a university in that country. Foley said her office helps them to make the transition. But, she said, they must be fluent in the language of the country to which they transfer.

Although many students think it is a valuable experience to study abroad and Foley agrees, she says her office is also to help students decide if that would be the best thing for them. She likes to counsel them and encourages them to read a pamphlet called "Students Abroad: A Guide for Selecting a Foreign Education."

The OIES also maintains an international resource center as part of its services. This includes "Culture Kits" available for more than 140 countries. The kits are loaned to students, faculty and Iowa residents to increase their awareness of other cultures, Foley said.

The other main department of the OIES deals with foreign students since there are about 1500 on campus. Foley said they counsel and help students with such problems as housing, financial aid, and U.S. law and customs.

Although most see the OIES as a way to study abroad, the office is not directly involved with every student that studies in another country, she said. Her office helps other departments around the campus set up their own study programs and to get students into these programs, she said.

Foley said the office also helps students obtain financial aid for foreign study. If a student is currently receiving aid at Iowa State, she said chances are good that a student can apply for aid to study overseas. There are also a few scholarships available but most are for graduate students, she said.

The OIES and its available programs are publicized through the ISU Daily and a newsletter which can be obtained from Foley.

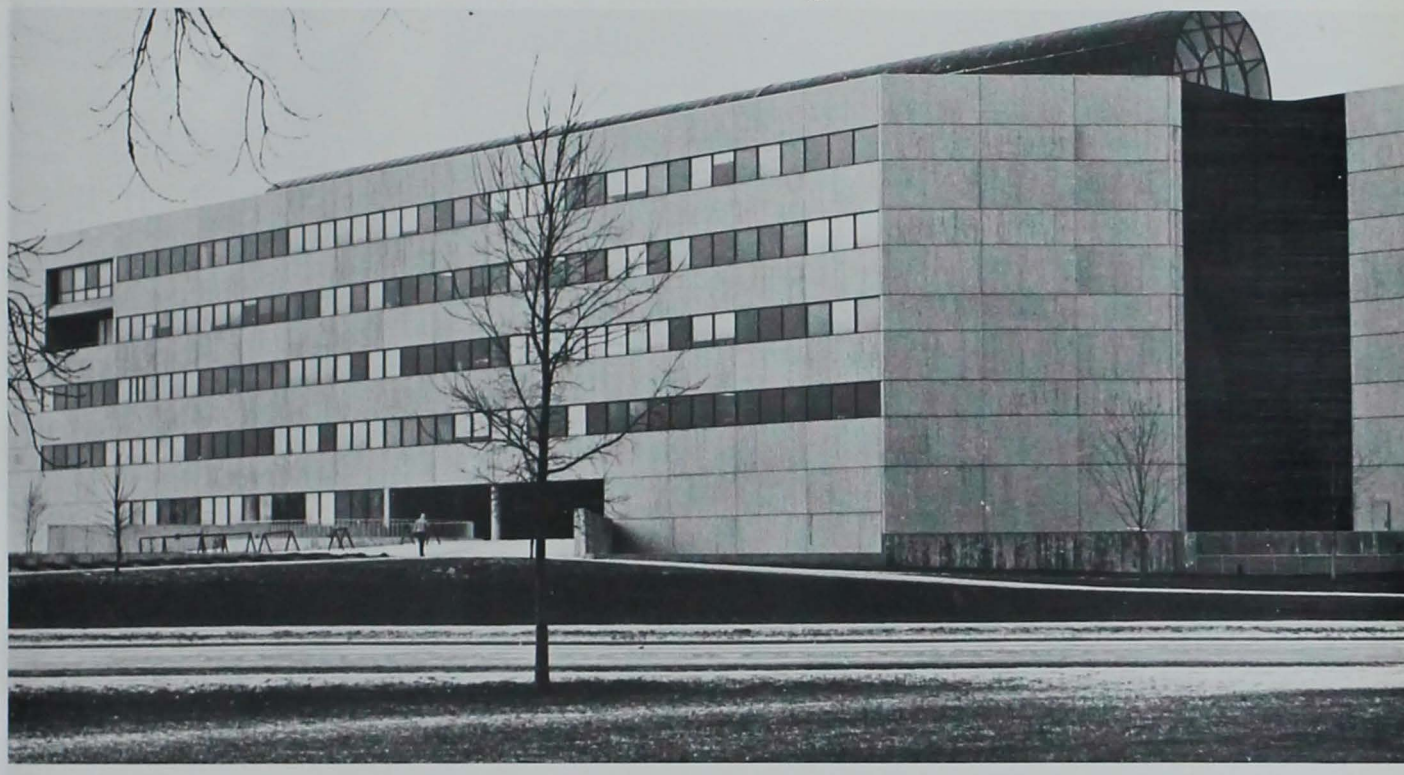
ISU Gets a New College



The College of Design Building — more commonly known as the Design Center — is a recent addition to the ISU campus. It opened for classes in September, 1978, but the dedication by Governor Robert Ray and several other dignitaries during Veishea '79 formally opened the building.

The College of Design Building houses the newly formed College of Design. It brings the departments of art and design (formally applied art), community and regional planning, architecture and landscape architecture together, according to Michael Brooks, dean of College of Design.

"Daily interaction is its strongest point," Brooks said. Before the construction of the College of Design Building, the departments were divided among the colleges of Engineering, Agriculture and Home Economics. The completion of the College of Design Building brought the departments, and the people in them together.

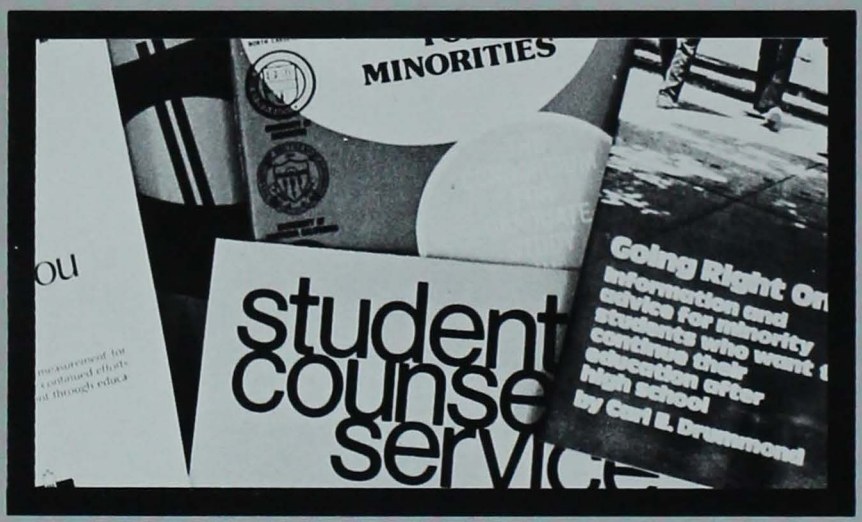
Jackson Helps Minority Students at ISU



Minority students face different problems than do white students at Iowa State. Dr. George Jackson is trying to help them face these problems.

Jackson, director of Minority Students Affairs, specializes in retention programs — programs to keep minority students at ISU. His office, he said, is used to facilitate the admission and graduation of minority students.

"There are numerous ways to do that," Jackson said. "The major way is through monitoring. We follow up on students. We check with advisers, instructors and write letters to them. Our main objective would be to insure that students feel good about him or herself. In turn, they feel good about their work."

The Minority Affairs office is primarily concerned with academic problems, he said. All minority students are urged to take advantage of a tutorial assistance program when they need help.

Jackson said students are watched by mid-term lists, whether or not they are on probation or temporary enrollment and by past performance in high school. If they are having problems, he sends out letters telling them their current situation and tells them where they can go for help. Students who have done well or have improved greatly may receive a letter of commendation.

Jackson said the tutorial services work well "for those who are better students. Tutoring does not seem to work as well for students at the lower end of the totem pole. We have to prod them," he said.

Of the approximately 500 minority students at Iowa State, about two-thirds of them come to the office for help, he said. The retention rate here is 62 percent compared to a nationwide retention rate of 53 percent, Jackson said.

Along with academic help, minority students may need financial aid to remain in school. "The number one problem outside of retention and graduation is financial difficulties," he said. Jackson urges students to work through the financial aids offices, but "we try to facilitate that process for students. We try to identify them early while they're still in high school," he said.

The Minority Student Affairs Annual Report lists several ways their office tries to offer financial aid. For example, there is a Martin Luther King, Jr. Fund and a Disadvantaged Student Fund, which provides students with a work-study experience. The office also helps minority students find off-campus jobs.

Jackson does a small amount of recruiting minority students, as well as developing guidelines and controls. He works with other offices to accomplish this task. The Affirmative Action Office at ISU is more active in recruiting students, he said. The percentage of minority students at Iowa State is small now but Jackson hopes to increase enrollment to 600 by 1981 and 1,000 by 1985.

"It's not easy to get minorities here," he said. "Geographically speaking, Iowa doesn't have that many minorities. It's not like being in metropolitan Detroit. Another thing about Iowa is that it is unique in that young people who grow up here move out of Iowa."

He said he is optimistic about minority enrollment increasing. "Blacks and other minorities are going to be in a very advantageous position," Jackson said. "We're graduating at a larger rate than ever before. You're going to see more blacks at ISU in the 1980's and 1990's."

The Student Experience at WOI

Newsfive, WOI-TV's news department, has made several changes in the last two years under the recent addition of news director Ed Hart. These changes have not only improved WOI's image in news, but it has also caused other stations in the market to take a serious look at themselves and make their own changes.

The new image includes catering to a younger audience, according to James Baker, WOI reporter. Baker said since they are trying to reach a younger audience they have increased the amount of student participation during news broadcasts and production.

Many of the students who intern or work at WOI during their college career stay there after they graduate, Baker said. Money is one reason. "We pay a higher wage to our reporters," Hart said. Reporters are more skilled at WOI, he said.

The skill comes from the excellent training students receive at WOI, one student said. "I would feel confident anywhere with the training I've received here. I've worked here three years but I haven't decided if I will stay here after graduation," she said.

WOI employs about 20 ISU students who help write and broadcast the evening news. The increase in the number of professionals, part of the new regime, makes it possible for the students to learn more than they have in the past when the station was mostly student run, Hart said.

"We want the students instead of needing them today," Hart said. "Instead of sending them out with no experience, we can train them better with the increase in our staff."

"Instead of classroom demonstration material, these students can put actual stories on their resume tapes," Baker said.

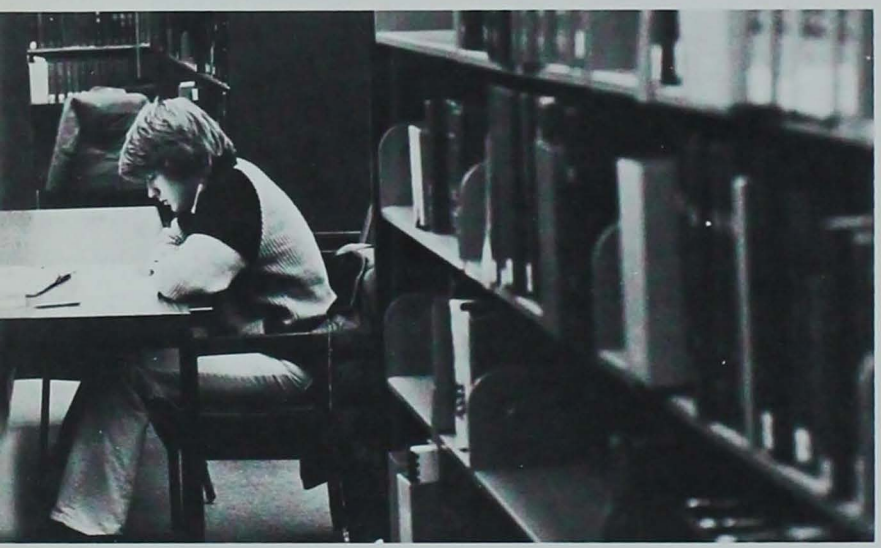
The ISU Library to get an addition



The Iowa State Library is a part of every student's life, but few know more about it than what they learn in Library 160, a class all students are required to take.

The latest plan for the library is the addition of a new wing, which should be finished by late 1982, according to Paul Gherman, assistant library director. The addition, which will eliminate all of the metered and some reserved parking in the lot north of Marston Hall, will add about 65,000 square feet, Gherman said. The wooden addition to the Hub will also have to be removed, he said.

Plans for the addition include two phases. Phase I includes the extension of the building and will be funded by an $8.1 million appropriation from the state Legislature. Phase II consists of a renovation of the current library. It has been delayed though, because of funding problems, Gherman said.

Plus-Minus Grading in Review

Plus-minus grading — more accurate evaluation of student performance or insignificant detail? Help or hinderance in calculating those all-important grade-point averages?

Plus-minus grading was a topic of debate for many students and faculty members in the College of Sciences and Humanities during fall and winter quarters of the 1979-80 school year. At an S & H Representative Assembly meeting held Nov. 14, 1979, that body voted 37-9 in favor of implementing plus-minus grading in the S & H College.

George Bowen, physical science, may have summed up the pro plus-minus feeling best when he said, "I'm glad that giving grades is a serious business." But S & H Council student members present at the meeting disagreed — perhaps with the idea that getting grades is just as serious. Four students spoke against plus-minus grading at the meeting.

Mike McClellan, S & H Council President, told the Representative Assembly that the council — which is made up of students from every S & H major area — opposed plus-minus grading for four reasons. The students' concerns were with grade deflation, failure to see any significant difference in GPA after figuring grades, more instructor time spent on calculating grades, and "the teacher will inevitably be making more 'wrong' decisions because of the erroneous classification scale."

McClellan and the other students present also expressed concerns on the effect of plus-minus grading for just one college. At this time, Sciences and Humanities was the only college with serious efforts underway to obtain a plus-minus grading scale.

After passing the Representative Assembly, the plus-minus proposal went to George Christensen, vice-president for academic affairs. If he approved the proposal, it went to the General Faculty for approval. If passed, plus-minus would become a reality in fall, 1980.

ORGANIZATIONS

Playing the "Game" of Human Relationships

The room is silent. A group of people is seated around a playing board resembling a Monopoly game. One group member draws a blue card from the multi-colored deck. He reads it aloud: "How do you feel the person sitting on your left perceives you? Explain why he or she perceives you this way."

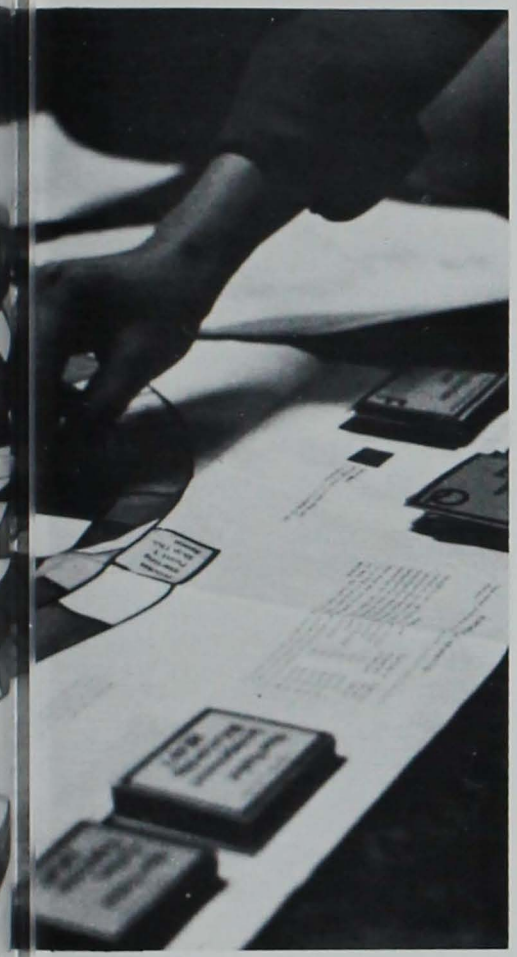
This playing board may resemble a Monopoly game, but the responsibilities and roles of the players are very different. One game requires buying strategy and desire for power, while the other game asks its players to be honest.

The game is called "Reach Out" and was constructed by Steve Winer, a former Speech 210 instructor at ISU. Students from Winer's classes who wanted to practice their skills in interpersonal communication formed the ISU Inter-Personal Communication Association in Spring 1978. The group held regular meetings in Spring 1979, which was Winer's last quarter at ISU.

According to Winer, "the purpose of the association is to make people aware of their skill level and help them control interpersonal communication skills. The organization's structure consists of three levels: theory, application, and "what really is." A student can advance to the different levels as his or her skills improve.

The first level, theory, involves much of the information learned in a Speech 210 class. (A student is not required to take Speech 210 to join the group.) After basic skills are learned and/or reviewed, the students in level one practice teaching skills. This way, new members can be taught basic skills by someone who has completed the class. At this level, players focus on the construction of messages. Winer said he feels every message has a word that needs clarification.

The second group, application, involves role-playing that deals with such situations as male/female relationships, roommate disagreements, and family problems. The purpose of role-playing is to integrate learned skills with possible situations, Winer said.



Real life is the concentration for group three. Students discuss feelings about each other and try to evaluate messages accurately.

"Our reaction to others is often based on how we think others perceive us or feel about us. Many of us have been trained to hide our reactions to others; likewise, we have been trained to act on our inferences or perceptions of others as if they were fact," Winer said.

Burt Bottjen, Zool 4, has been an active member of the association since it began. "The ulterior motive is to be persuasive. You tell them how you feel, and they can accept it or not," he said.

Bottjen said group one helped him realize how much people infer. Many times a person will say something to someone and the receiver of the message will be offended or not understand the speaker's statement, he said.

"It was hard to apply the skills at first; you really don't know what is going on until you do some role-playing and see the results. You pick up helpful hints in the training. One rule is never say "but" when trying to tell someone your feelings," he said.

Winer stressed that the point of the group is help people find out how others perceive them.

But because of lack of interest by the speech department and lack of sponsorship, the group has been unable to advertise to the entire student body. While the game is still played in Speech 317 classes, Winer has left ISU because he feels he is a "radical" professor.

Meanwhile, the fate of the Inter-Personal Communication Association depends on two things: continued student interest and the finding of a permanent faculty advisor.

CYCLONE BAND 1979

Tuba player, Reggie Harrington, concentrates for a hefty oom-pah during band practice, right. Lisa Ellis.

Who else but an ISU Cyclone Band member?

Instilling excitement is what the marching band is all about, according to Jimmie H. Reynolds, the band's director.

"We will do almost anything that's in good taste to entertain the crowd. On occasion, we've done things that weren't in good taste," he said.

With 240 student members — less than 10 percent who are music majors — the Cyclone Band exuded excitement at 1979 ISU football games.

The 1979 group marched into its 31st year of existence with a style that included precision maneuvers as well as non-precision maneuvers such as the on-the-back kicks.

Reynolds said the fast circular maneuver represents swirling cyclones. According to Reynolds, the band's unusual style is a big reason for its popularity.

Reynolds said he thinks the marching band's style fits in nicely at ISU. He said the football crowds seem to appreciate the performances.

And despite a practice schedule of more than seven hours during a home game week, Reynolds had to turn down about 100 students for membership this year. The competition has increased every year and so has the quality of the band, he said.

This fall, every section except for the flutes, tubas, and percussion sections was filled on a first-come, first-serve basis, Reynolds said. Next year, all members may be auditioned, he added.

Part of the secret of the band's success has been the relationship among the members, he said. "They seem to turn each other on. As a consequence, I hope we can turn the audience on."

The marching band enjoyed a few important highlights during the 1979 football season. These included performing at a Minnesota Vikings football game, an ABC-televised game against Missouri, the Iowa-Iowa State game and Homecoming.

Reynolds said the "far and away" most popular musical number was the band's adaptation of the song "Joshua."

In addition to the enjoyment of performing, there is a satisfaction to be gained from doing the football game performances, Reynolds said. He said he often notices that the band's entrances and on-the-field activities bring out more cheers from the crowd.

For himself and the members, said Reynolds, "That's a wonderful, wonderful feeling."

CLOWNING FOR CHRIST

Clowns interpret Psalm 104 on a church deputation, right. Lisa Ellis

Faith in God doesn't have to be all seriousness anymore. About 15 members of the Iowa State Clown Club have provided an alternative.

It's called clowning around for Christ.

Members of various faiths within the club use their clowning skills to bring a fresh approach to the ministry. Their clowning activities range from acting out scripture readings at Ames area churches to entertaining day care youngsters to clowning at keggers.

With each activity, the club's goals are the same: to reach into themselves to discover and grow and to reach out to others to share Christ's messages. Member Margaret Adams sums up the group's philosophy of clowning in this way:

"It's an expression of faith in a very unique way. It's the kind of expression that lets you relate to people of any age, in any kind of group, and in any kind of situation. It's a form of witnessing (for Christ) but it's more of showing love, care, concern, for others.

"When I clown, it's kind of like God gives me the inspiration and I try to relate what I feel in a very simplistic way."

Each club member approaches clowning individually, Adams said. So their audiences see different types of dress, different props such as handkerchiefs and kazoos, and various childlike personalities. Club members usually conform to the white-face, mute, mime style of clowning.

The philosophy behind clowning for Christ is fairly new. The club began during the 1977-78 school year and really grew and developed during the 1978-79 year, Adams said.

Financial support for the group comes from the Wesley Foundation of the Collegiate United Methodist Church in Ames, she said.

The Rev. Gary Putnam, associate pastor of Collegiate United, said the congregation's reaction to clowning during services and church activities has been mixed. Some people — especially the young — have been delighted. Others are not ready for it and need to find out more about the theology behind clowning for Christ, he said.

"NOT JUST A ROOM TO COME HOME TO"

Privacy may be a prime motivating factor of students moving off-campus from residence halls at Iowa State.

"I really enjoy the living space and having a house, not just a room to come home to," Kathy Dillion, I Ad 4 said. Before moving off-campus, Dillion lived in Tappan House, Barton Hall of the RCA (Richardson Court Association).

Off-campus housing rates in Ames range from less than $100 to over $400 monthly. Dillion and her three roommates pay $360 per month for a two-bedroom apartment on Welch Avenue. Prices vary with regard to size, proximity to campus, parking, and permission for pets.

Also exclusion or inclusion of utilities in rent cost influences rates. Electricity, gas, water and garbage removal services can easily add up to an additional $50 monthly. Phone services — including installation fees and a $9.00 monthly service charge must be figured into living costs.

With a 15 percent increase in the Iowa State dormitory housing rates in 1979, many people have chosen to "escape" to off-campus living. The price of residence hall housing is $468 per quarter. This cost includes food, cleaning, heating and phone service.

GREEK WEEK BLOOD DRIVE

A total of 2,200 pints of blood were donated during the Blood Drive, above. Frank DeVaul

When a person thinks of giving to a charity they usually think of giving donations to the needy or poor. Every spring a group of students at Iowa State organize themselves in preparation for one of the biggest fund raisers on campus. The group is made up of students belonging to Greek houses at Iowa State. The charity is the annual Greek Week Blood Drive.

Co-chairpersons for the Greek Week Blood Drive in 1979 were Art Smith and Nancy Wise. These people were responsible for organizing subcommittees that help to make the recruiting of eight different blood banks and the scheduling of donors. They also were in charge of setting up tables in the Memorial Union, and obtaining volunteer nurses and aids to assist in the donating. Along with doing all the "foot work" for publicizing the event, students also took time to serve refreshments to those who donated blood.

A total of 2,200 pints of blood were donated during the week-long drive. Of the thousands of people who joined in this drive, the top Fraternity participating was Farmhouse. Top participating Sorority was Alpha Delta Pi. The top participating group overall was Farmhouse.

ALL UNIVERSITY ELECTION COMMISSION

Iowa State elections are the responsibility of the All-University Elections Commission. The power to run elections is granted to AUEC in the GSB (Government of the Student Body) Constitution.

The commission is composed of a voting chairperson, selected by the GSB vice president, and an additional six voting members.

Five members are selected by the GSB president from the student body. The other member is selected by the GSB vice president and must be a GSB senator.

AUEC has the responsibilities of supervising the student administration and tabulating the balloting of the GSB elections and All-University Elections.

An All-University Election is defined as any election in which a majority of the student body is eligible to vote and every residence group and collect is represented by the electorate.

AUEC has nine polling places for elections.

These are Beardshear, Gilman, the Library, the Memorial Union, Veterinary Medicine, Kildee, Ross, Carver and the Design Center. There must be at least two attendants at each polling area when the polls are open.

The attendants are responsible for identifying and recording the voter's names and answering any questions the voters might have pertaining to the mechanics of the election.

To be able to vote in any specific election, a student must present a current fee card to be appropriately marked by a poll attendant and should be able to produce a picture or temporary identification card if requested.

The commission places budgetary limitations on candidates running for a GSB position.

The presidential vice presidential slate is limited to $250. College senators, senators at-large, unaffiliated senators and residence senators cannot exceed $50 for their campaign expenses.

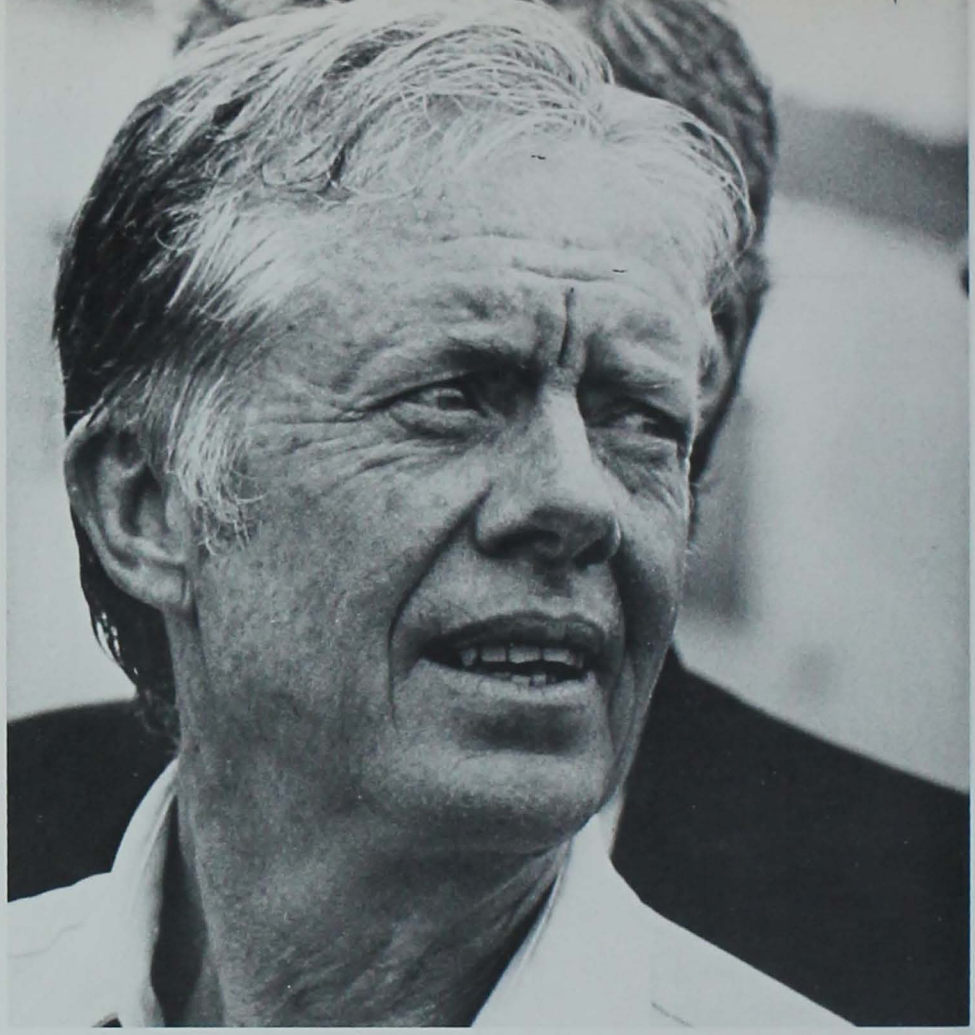
POLITICS



The 1980 campaign is moving across the nation and to college campuses where candidates are voicing their policies to students. To some candidates, university students are a major campaign area. Others voiced opposition against students because voter turnout has been low in past years. Tim Hetz, Ted Kennedy (upper right) representative, feels students have a role in the presidential campaign.

Hetz said, "Since students have been granted the right to vote at 18, they have become the life blood of a campaign." "Even before the voting age, young people have played a major role in making a campaign go from the start," Hetz said.

Dave Doak, assistant field director for the Jimmy Carter (above) and Walter Mondale campaign, said, "We hope to have an active program on colleges. College students are as important as any other groups." "College students tend to be more active and productive in campaigns," Doak said.

The Jerry Brown (lower right) campaign doesn't have faith in students like some of the others have expressed.

Richard Tind, Brown's director for caucus organization, said, "All candidates feel the same about college students. The one problem with university voters is the turnout is lower than other groups."

Tind said the Brown campaign does try to promote actions on campuses but they haven't found the approach to increase voter turnout. "We have programs to register voters that are aimed at the university student. They definitely have every right to be recognized as campaign preference, but they are a group that needs to increase participation so candidates will respond to their ideas and wants," Tind said.

Rick Lobe, Robert Reagan campaign, said, "Young people are more accepting today to Reagan and his policies." Lobe said students can make a campaign work because they add a special insight to the world and problems.

The George Bush campaign feels students are a major impact in today's elections. Reid Crawford, Story County coordinator for Bush, said, "I have always considered the student vote important. Students in Story County could make a fantastic impact on the presidential nominee in both parties, but I don't think they will because they won't go to the caucuses and vote." Crawford said students don't realize the power they have and when to exert their power with presidential campaigns. He said students have to act before the actual voting on November 4.

"If 1,000 to 2,000 students showed up at the caucuses it would definitely make an impact because there are about 40,000 at the Iowa caucuses. The percentage of students could be the largest if they would go," he said.

When you think of careers in agriculture, the agri-business corporations, grain elevators and corn fields of the Midwest might come to mind before overseas opportunities do. J. T. Scott, assistant Dean in the College of Agriculture at ISU, might disagree.

Scott coordinates all international agricultural career information and opportunities for the ag college. He describes the situation for ag students seeking overseas employment as "very different" from that of students seeking domestic careers.

"Employers from domestic companies regularly come to campus and hold interviews for students seeking jobs with them," Scott said. "The student who wants to work overseas has to search out such jobs."

Federal agencies — especially those connected with the State Department — can be a valuable aid for students seeking international jobs, Scott said.

Contacting universities with overseas

employment programs, international private enterprises and international voluntary or service organizations are other ways students interested in working abroad can hunt work, he added.

Making yourself marketable for that overseas job is also important, Scott said. "I advise students to take a 'bread and butter' course in an area — ag business, agronomy, etc. — and then to broaden their education with a double major in either international studies or international agriculture." If the student has no time for a second major, Scott said he will urge them to take as many courses in international agriculture or international studies as possible. "But we demand they find a primary major to be able to have a profession." In fall, 1979, about 15 students came to Scott with questions on international employment. "If you look," he said, "the career opportunities overseas are there."

"People in agronomy have accepted me as a woman. Because they have, I'm ready for the challenge of the outside world."

These are the words of Mary Hagemann, a senior majoring in agronomy with a plant science emphasis. She describes herself as a first-generation woman in agriculture, ready to open the door to others who may want to join her in the field.

Hagemann said she's always been interested in field crops and soils, especially because of her farm background. The agronomy department at Iowa State is an excellent place for her to pursue those interests, and Hagemann put her skills to use while on campus.

For two summers she worked at Plant Introductions in Ames, researching corn, sunflower, beet, carrot, radish and other seed types from various countries. Last summer she did fieldwork and had a research project focusing on ear shoot development of 10 different corn hybrids. Her outside activities deal with agriculture: she's the first woman president of the Agronomy Club, a member of Alpha Zeta Sorority, the agriculture honorary, and in the Honors Program.

Hagemann's plans following graduation include attending grad school to get a degree in crop physiology with an emphasis in production. But her ultimate goal is to be an extension consultant, helping farmers make their operations more efficient and profitable.

Scott Stamy is a student with a passion for farming, tractors and thoroughbreds.

Stamy, from Norway, Iowa, is an agriculture mechanization major. He is involved in Agricultural Mechanization Club and Agricultural Council. He is president for 1979-1980 year. "Ag mechanization is not mechanics," Stamy said. "It is the theory of operation. You get a little bit of everything — business to animal science."

Stamy has served as secretary and vice president for the Ag Mech. Club. His most memorable experience was restoring an old tractor for Veishea 1979. "It took us two and one-half years and $700 to restore the tractor." Money was provided by club members and the sponsor, the Firestone Rubber Company.

Stamy owns the restored tractor. "We club members drew names from a hat and I won." Stamy uses the tractor to promote the club at various events.

Stamy's future? He is currently interviewing with John Deere for a position. "But I really want to farm," he said.

The only time I ever eat bugs is when I ride my motorcycle," Rick Doak said. "No way would I ever do it for nutritional reasons."

Doak is an entomology/pest management major. "But most people just call me a bug major," he said.

Doak liked science and a friend talked him into taking his first entomology class.

The first assignment was to start with mosquito eggs and raise them through reproduction. "The worst part was feeding them. Every night I had to stick my arm above the cage and wait while fifty females dined on my blood," Doak said. This assignment made him decide to change his major. Since then, he declared pest management as a secondary major and forestry as a minor.

Doak spends a lot of time at McCowen House, Wallace Hall, where he is the Resident Assistant. "I really enjoy the job — I certainly don't do it for the money alone," Doak said. Doak is a member of "just about all of the intramural teams" and works with the TRA Senate.

"I feel ready to graduate," Doak said. "230 credits and five years is enough for anyone."

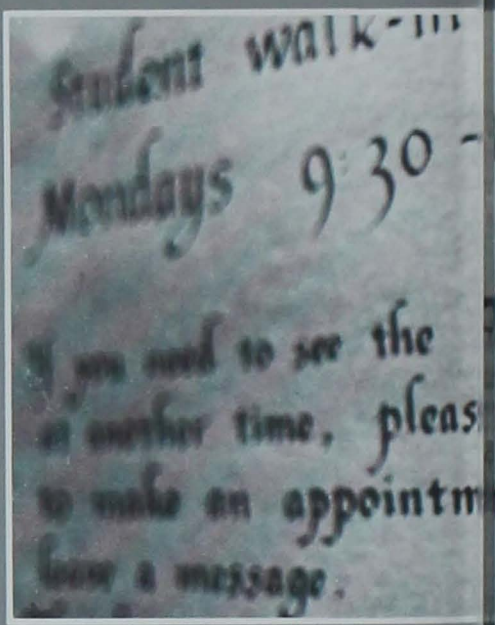
NEW PLACEMENT FOR DESIGN



There is no such thing as a free lunch or interview trip in the world of design. Design seniors have to "pound the streets" with their portfolios looking for jobs while their engineering friends are flown around the country.

Job hunting can be rough. But Jan Moore is here to make that task easier. This is the first year for a placement office in the College of Design. The previous year, each design major was sectioned into different colleges of the university.

"I am here to prepare the student to knock on doors. Actually, the word 'placement' is misused. My job simply connects the prospective employee to the employer.

"By the time hiring is actually taking place, the placement officer is already out of the process," she said.

Moore said she has been getting the program underway by making contracts with professionals to let them know that the design college has a placement office. She is also trying to reach as many student groups as possible, so they can take advantage of the program's services. This has been difficult for Moore since she is only part-time due to the lack of funding.

Preparing design students for job hunting is one of Moore's main goals as placement officer. This includes teaching resumé writing, putting together a portfolio, developing contacts with professionals, offering advice or just listening to students.

After Cindy Dean transferred from Iowa to Iowa State, she was looking for more than art for art's sake. She was looking for a more practical side of art and found it at Iowa State.

Dean said her major interests focus on being an art director or working on publication design. Of all the courses Dean has taken, she said publication and design (JLMC 342) has been the greatest asset to her career plans. "I found out from that course what kind of job I wanted to look for," she said.

Dean designed ads for Ethos magazine, designed the 1979-80 4-H National Collegiate newsletter, and works part-time at the Iowa Department of Transportation (DOT) where she drafts for the road design department.

After completing the only calligraphy course offered at ISU, Dean spent a quarter of independent study in calligraphy. Although calligraphy will not be a career for Dean, she said it has helped her commercial art skills. "It has made me more sensitive to different kinds of type."

"We consider it a pre-professional field experience that combines methods classes with classroom participation," said Todd Shirley, elementary education and coordinator of the Involvement Program.

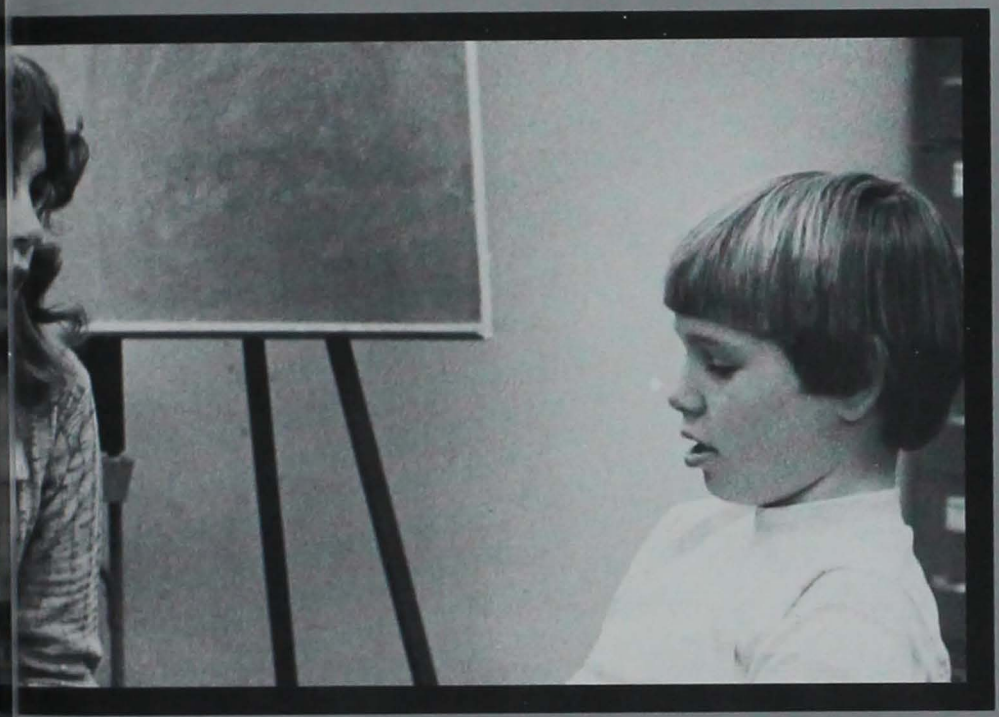
Dr. Shirley started the Involvement Program about six years ago in an attempt to give students a chance to see what teaching is all about before they're too far into the program to change their minds.

The Involvement Program is usually worked into a student's curriculum during the sophomore year although a few do wait to participate until their junior year.

If students participate in the program, they are required to take eighteen credit hours from the elementary education department. This includes two days a week of direct involvement in the classroom.

Tuesdays and Thursdays are spent on the job, with students directly involved in the classroom. On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, the students attend class.

EDUCATION: THE INVOLVEMENT PROGRAM



The twenty students in the program are picked on a first-come, first-served basis. According to Dr. Shirley, they spend a lot of time together. "This is a self-contained block of time," he said, "with all the kids taking the same courses."

The courses required are El. Ed. 375 (a reading methods class), Education 301 (an audio-visual course), and El. Ed. 468 (the actual field experience).

The field experience is done at one of six elementary schools in Ames. Mitchell, Meeker, St. Cecilia, Roosevelt, Northwood and Edwards schools have Involvement Program students in any of the grades on through six.

Either one or two students are assigned to a class depending upon the need in the room. However, if a class has a student teacher, they will not have any Involvement students.

Dr. Shirley visits the students every week to see how they are doing and to provide feedback. "We have a consultation at the end of the program in which I point out their strengths and weaknesses," said Dr. Shirley, "but I also give suggestions along the way. I want to have a positive relationship with them."

Besides the field experience and the methods courses, the Involvement students take two field trips during the program.

One field trip is to Marshalltown to see a modular scheduling classroom in a junior high While there, the students also look at an open space classroom.

The other field trip is to AREA in Ankeny to see the facilities there and then on to Des Moines to visit an inter-city school.

Through the Involvement Program, Dr. Shirley said, "we try to help them (the students) touch base. We try to give them a variety of experience."

"I love to be active and work outside with people," leisure services major, Julie Forbes said. "I was advised to look into leisure services and the further I got into it, the more I enjoyed it," she said.

She said leisure services is a relatively new major in which a student can specialize in community, outdoor or theraputic recreation.

Last summer Julie worked in outdoor recreation as a park ranger at Salorville Lake. "I was the first to get an internship working for the Corporation of Engineers at Salorville Lake," she said.

Julie is a member of the Alpha Kappa Theta house and serves as a pledge trainer for new members. She hopes to attend graduate school at Michigan State University to study resource management for national parks.

"Teaching children that singing can be a part of everyday life" is an important goal of my life, Ted Yungclas, an elementary education major said. Music is stifled in our elementary schools and should be made more free-spirited, he said.

Ted, a member of the Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity, said his musical talents have been enhanced this year as he served as co-director of a Varieties skit. As co-director Ted selected and arranged the music for the skit. He then created a script to go with the music.

Within his fraternity, he has served as coordinator of the associate-member and the "little sister" program.

Ted said he would like to be an elementary teacher, preferably in Iowa. The job outlook is good, he said. "I shouldn't have trouble finding a job I would be happy with," he said.

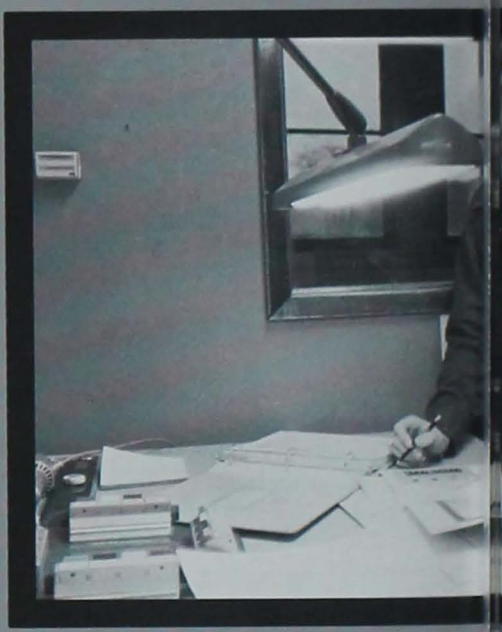
ENGINEERING: CO-OP PROGRAM



As far as many students and faculty members in the College of Engineering are concerned, one big advantage offered by that college is the co-op program. The co-op program offers engineering students opportunities for "hands-on" experience, according to Herb Harmison, placement officer in the College of Engineering. When students are on a co-op program, they are out of school and out in the working world for a period of one to two or more quarters. They work in professional engineering jobs and gain experience in their major area.

One possible problem for ISU engineering co-op programs might be the implementation of the semester system. Some engineering co-op program students have said the semester system — which will begin in the fall of 1981 — will cut down on the flexibility of the co-op programs.

Harmison said the status of co-op programs under the semester system will depend on how summer sessions under the semester system are set up.

If the summer session system implemented under the semester system offers a wide variety of courses for engineering students, co-op programs will not be greatly affected by the switch, he said. Students won't have to spend extra semesters in school if they can make up courses they missed while "co-oping" — if they can take them during summer session.

Malcolm Johnson, C E 3, has worked with Jim Valenta, Ames traffic engineer, in a co-op program. Johnson said he felt semesters might be a problem for civil engineering co-op program students, in terms of time spent and available opportunities. "It depends on what the engineer wants from the student," Johnson said.

On the other hand, some co-op programs may benefit from the semester switch. For example, McDonald-Douglas in St. Louis primarily offers semester co-op programs.

For Ken Day, a senior in agricultural engineering, his family is a lot more than someone to write home to.

Day lives in Story City with his two children, Kimberly, 8, and Benjamin, 6.

"Kids like attention," Day said. "Sometimes it makes it a little hard to study for tests." What advice would Day give to people trying to go to school and raise children at the same time?

"Farm the kids out," he said jokingly. Then, he added "Make sure you get yourself together. Once you lose track of yourself, it's too easy to lose track of your family."

Day has been active in the Adult Students Association at Iowa State. He has also spent time working on an Ag Mech 490 project, testing the frictional co-efficient factor of grain. Day graduated at the end of winter quarter, 1980. Upon graduation, he went to work in Hutchinson, Ks., for the Cessna Company's hydraulics division.

The Home Economics College has a large number of degrees available to undergraduates. One degree has a first hand chance to experience what life in the real world is all about. The Tea Room, in the basement of MacKay Hall, gives institutional management majors a 'real world' experience.

Ruth Robson, instructor of Institutional Management 380, said, "We have between 30 and 40 students a quarter take the course." Robson said in past years the course has had to offer night classes because the enrollment for the class was up. But, the last few years there has been a change.

"The Home Economics enrollment has dropped off a little in the last two years. This has cut back all the classes," she said. The Tea Room serves lunch to an average of 87 people a day according to Robson.

Students in the class are responsible for the preparation of all foods and must handle all emergency problems, Robson said. The only phase of operation students don't handle is the menu.

In the past students handled this area but, experience has shown it is too complicated for

HOME EC: THE TEA ROOM

20 students to make menus and it was dropped. The instructor now draws up the menus with requests from the students hand in Robson said.

The menu offers a different salad, entree, bread and vegetable each noon for diners. The menu is prepared in advance so customers can request to eat in advance. The Tea Room serves mainly faculty and staff but serves some students on special occasions, Robson said.

The service operates on money received from the meals. Each meal costs the diner $1.60. Robson said the price covers all expenses but inflation will probably cause an increase in the price in the future.

Seating is by reservation only and Robson said the room is usually full every noon. She said the experience gained by students from taking Institutional Management 380 is excellent for anyone interested in majoring in Food Nutrition and Management.

"I enjoy eating and drinking, and what better way to do that than to go into hotel and restaurant management," Schmid said.

Don Schmid's choice of institution management as a major is based on a little more than his favorite pastimes. His family has designed and built restaurants in the Chicago and Los Angeles areas. "They can design them, and I'll run them," he said.

Being in a college that is largely female doesn't bother Schmid that much. "There are quite a few guys in my major area," he said.

After graduation in the summer of 1980, Schmid said he planned to work as an assistant manager at a country club in Elgin, Ill. Eventually, he would like to run a Victorian motif restaurant — designed by his family's company, of course.

"Food Industry is a dynamic and challenging field," Ann Ytzen said. Ytzen, a food science major in the Home Economics college said her experiences working with professionals through university-sponsored internships has confirmed her decision to go into food industry.

Spring quarter of 1979 Ann was part of the "Externship Program" in which she spent a week working for Pillsbury Company in Minneapolis.

"It was a very valuable experience," she said. "At Pillsbury Company I was exposed to all sides of food industry including advertising, marketing and food photography," she said.

On campus Ann has been involved in a number of organizations including Greek Week and Student Alumni Association (SAA). Ann was the co-chairman for Greek Week Blood Drive in 1978 and a cyclone guide for SAA.

As an active member of the Food and Nutrition Club, she has recently co-edited a cook book called "Iowa State's Finest."

If you want to work with fibers and fabrics, you'd major in textiles and clothing, right? Not always, according to home economcis education/craft design major Betsy Bowers.

"When I started here, I began in T & C," Bowers said. "But the work in that department is more with garments themselves — not the fabrics they're made of."

Though she'll student teach late in 1980, Bowers said she doesn't plan to teach. Ideally, she'd like to work as a home economist for a large company.

"I couldn't make a living by just working with fiber," she said.

Bowers has been active in Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, varsity sports, and home economics-related groups. She studied art in Scandinavian countries, and worked in extern and intern programs.

In winter, 1980, Bowers started an unusual extra-curricular activity — learning to play the campanile. "It's just something I want to do."

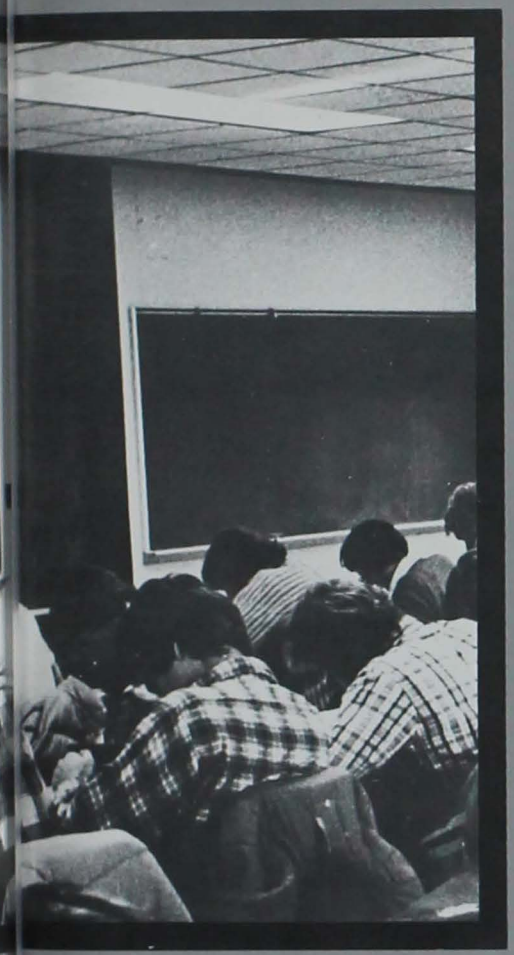
Don't think of it as losing the largest department in the College of Sciences and Humanities. Think of it as gaining a new school of business at Iowa State.

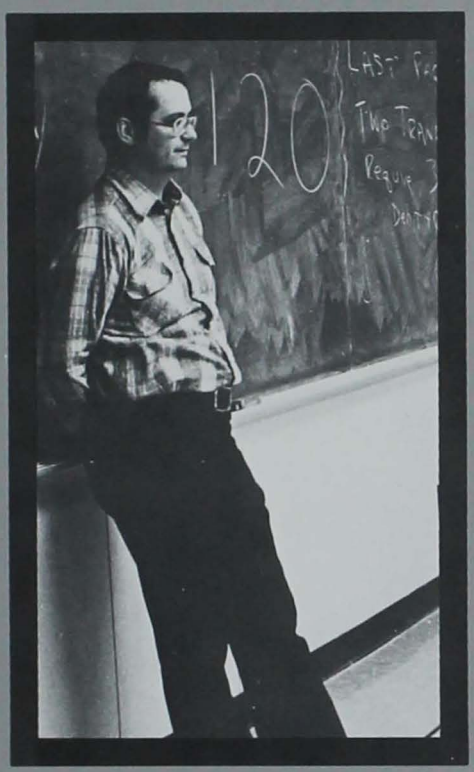
During the winter of 1979-80, a recommendation was made to Sciences and Humanities College Dean Wallace Russell to change the industrial administration department into a school of business.

The recommendation was made by the Industrial Administration Long-Range Planning Committee, a group set up during the previous school year. An ad hoc committee, appointed by Russell, the Industrial Administration Development Board, studied the planning committee's reports and presented the proposal to Russell.

Russell had the proposal at the time of this deadline. If the Dean approved the school of business idea, he would then submit it to Iowa State President W. Robert Parks for his approval.

SCIENCE AND HUMANITIES: I AD — A COLLEGE?





If Parks okayed the school of business proposal, he would recommend it to the state Board of Regents for further consideration.

Danley Sheldon, I Ad 3, is one student who strongly approves of the school of business idea. Sheldon, who is active in numerous I Ad organizations and honoraries, said the proposal for a school of business is a "good first step" toward an eventual College of Business.

"It would be good to eventually have a business college, because nearly all major universities have a business, college," Sheldon said. "Iowa State shouldn't be any different."

And, Sheldon added, "It'll help students getting degrees in specific areas (like accounting and marketing) to have that designation on a degree. Industrial administration is a confusing name.

Dave Cook has thought out his future well for job security reasons. He chose to double major in physics and computer science because "you never know how much money the government will be able to supply to astronomy." In computer science, there is a sense of job insurance because of the high demand," Cook said.

Cook has kept busy with an 11-year hobby that has lead him to international competition.

Last August, 1979, in Houston, Cook qualified for the model rocketry nationals. Cook explained that model rocketry involves making a glider with a rocket engine. Cook's rocket will then enter into the "payload" event at the international meet at Lakehearst, New Jersey, Sept. 7-11, 1979.

The payload event consists of measuring the highest altitude possible for the rocket. Cook also worked at the Radio Astronomy Observatory in New Mexico last summer doing research.

Cook said he plans to go on to graduate school. "I want to go to a good school so I will probably go to Berkeley, San Diego, or Massachusetts Institute (MIT) in Boston."

"There's no experience quite like it," Barb Kole said. Kole is a Resident Assistant (RA) for Tompkins House, Willow Hall.

Kole said she strongly believes that her experience as RA will help her later when dealing with people in the business world.

After graduation, Kole said she hopes to get a job in marketing research. In the summer of 1979, Kole gained experience in marketing research by working on a survey for General Motors in Detroit.

Kole also acquired business experience on-campus. She was the 1979 business manager for the Student Alumni Association (SAA) and was co-chairperson for the SAA National Convention which was held at Gateway Center September 21-23, 1979. At the present time Kole is handling the callathons for SAA which involves getting in touch with ISU alumni.

Steve Wegman is one of the forty-five people chosen from the U.S. who has the chance to be a Rhodes Scholar. If chosen, he will do research in London, England, for two years. Wegman is the first one to go this far in mathematics from ISU.

"Math isn't just cranking and grinding out problems . . . it's plugging into theories, proving and displaying things that can be postulated," Wegman said.

Besides schoolwork, Wegman spends a lot of time working on proofs — a mathematical way of solving an equation using verified theories. One of Wegman's proofs was published in the American Mathematical Monthly, Jan./Feb., 1979, and has another will be published in 1980. Wegman helps the math department teach calculus, the president of Phi Mu Epsilon, a mathematics honorary, and a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He has been awarded the Gertrude Adamson Scholarship twice and was awarded the Science and Humanities Scholarship in 1978.

Graduate school is in Steve's future plans. He plans to become a "differential topologist," work in research and eventually become a university mathematics professor.

"I gave up a lot of money to major in music, but the lifestyle will be more unconventional; not a nine to five job," Kirk Heer said.

Heer is one of the few people at ISU majoring in music. He plays the trombone and has performed in many ensembles — such as marching band and jazz band.

Heer said a music major is on a different schedule than the rest of the University, due to the large amount of time spent working on musical rehearsals and performances.

The small size of the ISU music department is one of its best features of being a music major, he said. "It puts things on a more personal level. You really get to know the instructors and other music majors," Heer said. He also said the new music building should help unify things even further. The music building is set to be completed in 1980.

After graduation, Heer plans to go on to a graduate school where graduate studies in music are offered.

CLASS OF
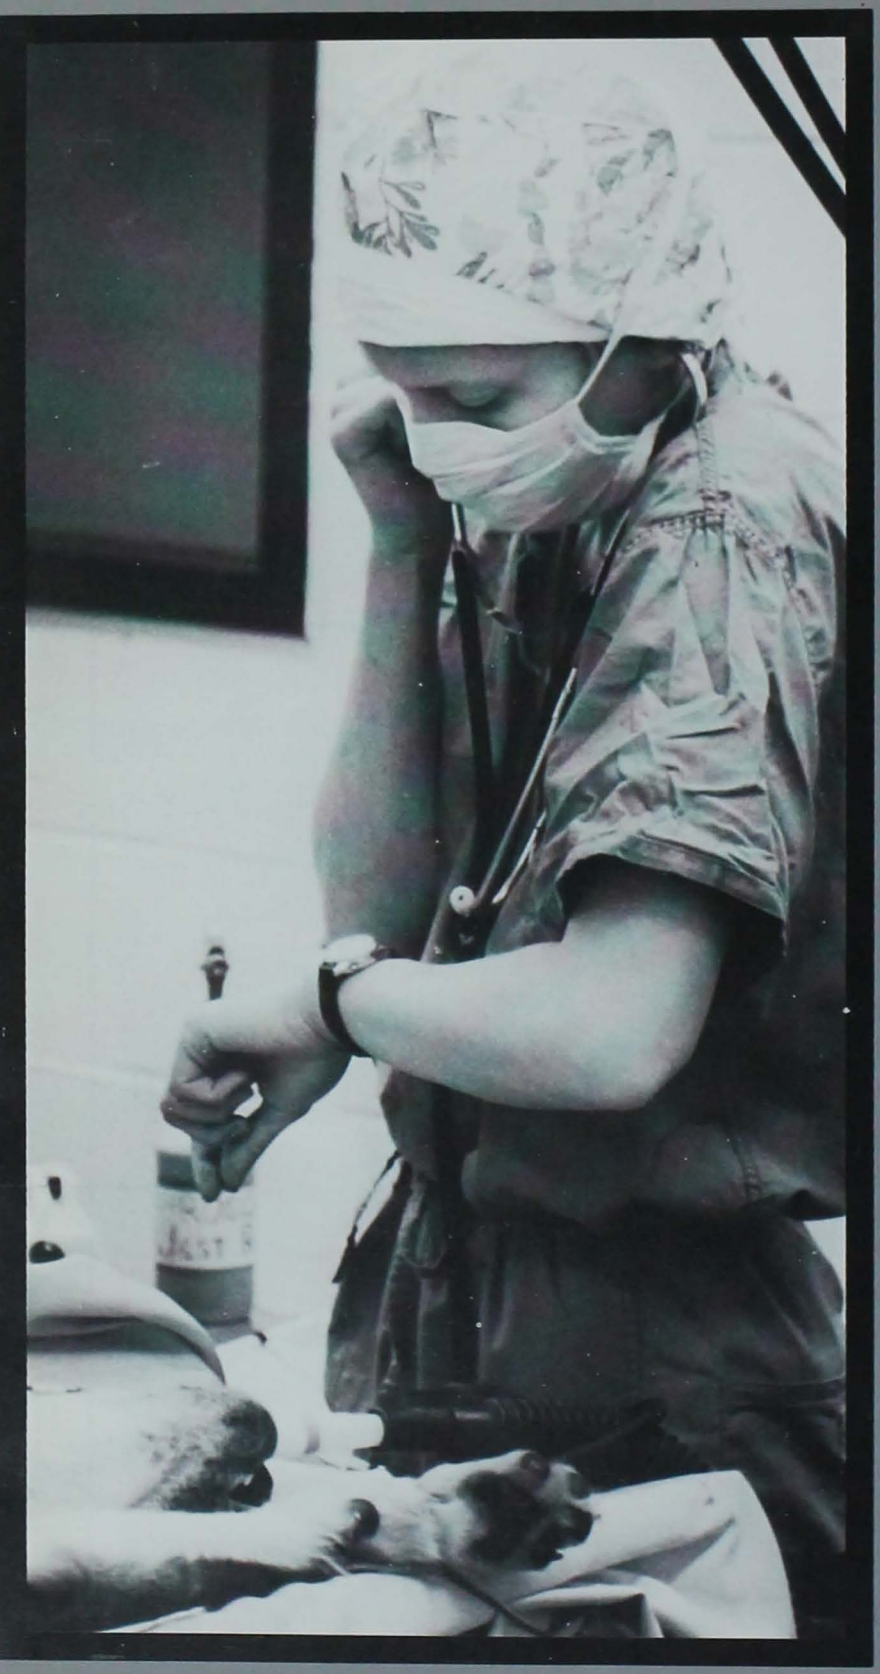
IOWA STATE UNIVERSITY
19 80



Nearly a third of the college of veterinary medicine is women. That number has held steady over the past five years, according to Roger Hogle, Assistant dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Since 1975, between 28 and 35 percent of the applicants to the college have been women. According to Hogle, the percentage accepted into the college has also remained about the same; because 28 and 35 percent of those accepted have been women.

Although no figures are kept, most women go into small animal or equine (horse) practice, Hogle said.

Joni Stevenson, V M 4, said she hopes to work with horses when she graduates this spring. She spent one of two required eight weeks of private practice in Washington state working with thoroughbreds.

Stevenson said she also plans on doing an internship at another university before going into practice for herself. The internship would give her an opportunity to specialize, something she can't do in the Vet school at Iowa State.

While most students do specialize in a certain area of practice, it is important to have a knowledge about all areas of veterinary medicine. Before one can practice veterinary medicine, they have to pass National Board exams and a state exam for each state they wish to practice in. Stevenson said any question about veterinary medicine is fair game on those tests.

Maryina Greer, VM 3, wants to practice small animal medicine, preferably in the southwest part of the country. She said she wanted to spend at least one of her eight-week periods in Phoenix, Arizona.

Jodi Arndt, VM 4, hopes to go into mixed practice. Unlike the other two, Arndt would like to stay in the midwest. She said she wants to practice on predominately small animals and horses as well as doing some sheep work.

With women making up a good portion of the vet med college (there are 145 women out of 480 total students), there seems to be little discrimination on the basis of sex.

"As a whole we're judged on individual merits," Stevenson said. "It's not a sexual discrimination."

Greer said she's found a little discrimination on the part of some classmates and professors. But, for the most part, it's not too bad," Greer said.

Arndt said she's noticed some discrimination, but most of it is not intentional. "Some of the physical things are naturally discriminatory, like 'pulling calves'," Arndt said.

Arndt said the instructors are "pretty careful about giving equal treatment." She noted that while there are some instructors left over from the 'old school' when women in vet med weren't as common, even they tolerate it."

As far as classmates go, Arndt said she expected more than she has found. "When I first started, it was a little different. Now we're all one big family."

Stevenson agreed. She said her male classmates sometimes are rough on the women in the class, but it is mutual. "They give us a hard time and we give them a hard time," Stevenson said.

Approximately 33 women will graduate from Iowa State University this year with a degree in Veterinary Medicine.

"FEAT" OF DIVERSITY

"Footing" ourselves into a new section, look down and around, on top of the ground. We see feet housed in shoes, representing virtually every campus niche.

Each shoe, whether tongueless or tongue-tied, speaks to our society about his or her individual tastes.

Just after dawn, a percussion of clogs crosses Lincoln Way toward campus. A "shooshing" sneaker is heard on its morning jaunt.

Across campus, a wave of "Famolaries" might make a last minute sweep out the door.

Once on campus, a multitude of soles overpopulates the sidewalks. Among the crowd, the Topsiders and the uppity Spiked heels stare lovingly into each other's eyelets. The business-like Wallabies and the Saddles are in a rush, stepping off the sidewalk to pass. The outspoken Chukka, Cowboy and Dexter Boot also make a determined stride to class, smashing open toes in their path. And there by the Union fountain, the Loafers are begging for a penny.

So how are they all alike? 'Heel' if I know. I guess each shoe fits a foot, each foot an individual. And what matters is that each person proceed with a "sure foot" to obtain an individual feat.

DIVERSITY REALIZED THROUGH MAJORS

People tend to categorize other people by generalizing or stereotyping. Students at Iowa State are no exception, as seen by the character traits sometimes attached to those who major in a particular subject.

Most labels on majors are funny, well known and harmless. But all labels fail to recognize the diversity which makes a unit of people a conglomeration of individuals. Besides, how well do students adhere to their respective type casts?

Do horticulture majors really spend all their free time composing and etching graffiti on the fogged-up greenhouse windows? Do psychology majors really relish their power over psych 101 students by subjecting them to electric shocks for one point of extra credit?

Do journalism majors always lose their pencil five minutes before deadline, only to discover it behind their ear?

Do all engineering students write home to mom in small, even all capital letters? Do art majors always wear four pairs of long underwear in order to bear the long walk to the Design Center during winter quarter?

Whatever the major, whatever the habit, all students somehow complement and humor each other through their differences.

DIVERSITY AND THE INDIVIDUAL

When you wake up in the morning and look into the mirror, who are you looking at? Is your life what you want it to be, or is it a fad you're following from the people and issues we live with?

Are you a shiny new car with all the basic parts other cars have? People should dare to try new and unique features within themselves that will set them apart from the rest. Too many times, last year's models are repeated because the individual doesn't want to explore something new. Instead, they blend in with the fads.

Are college students looking at the U.S. issues as fads? Large numbers of students participated in Iranian protests, the abortion issues, the Iowa caucuses and the anti-draft protests in 1980.

Why, after years of apathy from campuses across the nation, are students finally voicing their opinions and getting involved in the issues again?

Is it just another fad we're going through or are students really taking an interest in this country for a better future?

The country's issues depend on the reactions and responses the American public gives. The theme of diversity appeals for the sharing and accepting of different views and opinions. Being an individual means giving yourself to enrich the group as a whole.

TRADITIONALLY SPEAKING . . .

Everyone knows that you become an official ISU coed when you're kissed through all 12 strokes of the midnight campanile. It's common knowledge that you'll flunk your next test if you step on the brass zodiac dial in the north entrance to the Memorial Union.

We learn of these traditions early in our careers as ISU students.

The campanile tradition has lost its fire. When it began, female students were to be locked safely inside their dorms or sorority houses long before midnight. An official coed had to be one daring girl . . .

And as the zodiac dial is beginning to show wear, other activities are becoming traditional.

Ten years from now freshmen will probably know that it's unlucky to drop a class before the last day. And that they'll probably end up marrying a person they meet in line if they're dropping a class in the same department after 3:45 p.m.

No one will be able to graduate unless they can schedule their final quarter from scratch in the Great Hall of the Memorial Union.

Part of the fun of ISU is knowing what you do each quarter is setting traditions for classes yet to come.

THE 4-YEAR CHANGE

Going through college is almost synonymous with going through changes. Whether you're at Iowa State for four years, ten years, or just one quarter, chances are that the experiences you've had have affected who you are — and why you are that way.

Changes can be physical — ask anyone whose I.D. picture bears little resemblance to him now. Or whose freshman year clothes are yards too big or sizes small.

Though less obvious, changes in personality, lifestyle and personal beliefs also come about. Remember a freshman friend, the kid who never drank, cleaned his room and got up for church every Sunday? Did it surprise you two years later to see the same person in Dugan's Deli at 1:30 a.m. on Sunday morning, with a scraggly beard, full pitcher, NORML t-shirt and unpolished shoes?

Think of your own experiences — the people you've met, the job interviews, the classes, the good times and bad. Think of what you once believed in, and reevaluate it now. Have you changed? Perhaps you've grown as well.

SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST?

Dear Mom and Dad,

Remember the check you sent me for books and stuff? It didn't quite cover survival costs. I can't make it at ISU with one spiral notebook and Bic pen. I must have a backpack. For $17.95 I can get a deluxe red, blue, or orange one that's waterproof with adjustable straps and holds four notebooks, six hardcover books and one paperback, two PB&J sandwiches, an orange, a bus pass and my T-square! The cheaper ones only come in brown or green and they're made out of cloth. I also need some Ticonderoga No. 2 lead pencils. Every class has me shading in so many little circles. One of those mechanical pencils that spits the lead out would really do the job. I need a calculator, too. The one I put on lay-away does all the conventional stuff, plus square roots, trig functions, logs, exponentials, and plays the national anthem. Then all I need is a five-subject spiral, a pair of goggles for chem lab, and of course, an ISU T-shirt. Everything else is terrific. There's a big file stuffed with old tests in the den. I even got my hands on a copy of 1001 Excuses for Missing Classes. They really work. Now if you'd just send more money, I think I'll have everything I need.

UNIVERSITY GRAFFITI

Graffiti. Defacing public property. Causing janitors to work overtime in a vain attempt to keep walls, desks and sidewalks clean. Costing thousands in restoration and renovation.

Yet, graffiti has been with us since the beginning of communication — since the first scratchings on a cave wall. And it shows no signs of fading away.

As long as there is a need to communicate, there will probably be graffiti.

You can find virtually anything you want on a wall. Witticisms, vulgarisms, facts, fiction, fantasies, frustrations, ongoing conversations or profound statements from an anonymous guru can be seen.

Anonymity is graffiti's glory. You can express your deepest thoughts, release your pent-up feelings, relieve your boredom and leave your mark behind, hiding around a cloak of anonymity.

But graffiti changes with the times and language. You'd rarely see a 'Kilroy was here' or '23-Skidoo' now, much less understand what they mean. You might, however, see 'Frodo lives' or 'Don't drop acid; take it pass-fail.'

Not that we're advocating it, but graffiti is a fact of life. Have you left your mark on the university?

TIME TO SPARE

How often were we told as children not to waste time or that time is valuable. All the meaning behind these words of wisdom begin to make sense when we come to college, and time is our own.

We soon realize just how precious time is when we have a test to cram for with exactly 10 hours to study four weeks worth of material. We spend a fair amount of time waiting in lines, too — in the commons, in Beardshear, and in the book store. Even when we have time away from campus, books, and studying, much of it is devoted to house or chapter meetings, obligations to an intramural team or just picking up the apartment.

"Spare" time becomes an even more valuable commodity. It's ours, and we find many different ways to use it.

We may trot off to the gym for a pick-up game of basketball, release pent-up anxieties in a game of racquetball, or blow off steam jogging down a quiet back road.

Our spare time may be spent catching some rays in the Arboretum, catching a football in the front yard, or just "catching some z's" anywhere we can.

Spare time may be a time to watch T.V., write mom and dad, visit a friend, create something for a hope chest, or just look out the window and hope for good grades next quarter.

THE OLD PIPE SHOP

The final months of the decade saw the end of the "last vintage business in Ames" — the College Pipe Shop.

The 50-year-old shop, on the corner of Lincoln Way and Welch, was the "last root in Ames that didn't ever change," former owner Carroll Rierson said.

John P. Stuckey (above right), the long-term proprietor, was a familiar personality of the shop. He said the shop hadn't changed over the years.

The shop was a marketplace for the free flow of ideas and attitudes, W. E. "Bill" Martin, a long-time employee of the shop said. (below right)

"The Pipe Shop was told to leave its premises like an old lady against the wishes of hundreds of local people," Rierson said. Many Iowa State Alumni enjoyed returning to the shop when visiting Ames, he said.

The Bates Jewelry store owner bought the building in January of 1979 and when the Pipe Shop's lease ran out, an addition was made to the jewelry store.

The College Pipe Shop — a place to go for conversation, a newspaper or two cent candy will surely be missed by many and not soon forgotten.

INDEPENDENT STUDY: LIFE 490

By opening ourselves to the diverse nature at ISU, by looking at everything that touches us, we learn.

It's not the kind of learning that you'll get from a book, an article, or a four-credit course. And it's not the kind of learning where you'll have a quiz on Monday, memorize the terms and be able to outline the theories presented. It's a lot more than that. You don't even have to take notes or bring a No. 2 lead pencil.

But this kind of learning holds benefits far greater than knowing what DNA stands for or who was governor of Iowa in 1923.

By opening ourselves to life around us, we learn about who we are. What we learn about ourselves may be a pleasant surprise, or even a big disappointment. But, whatever we learn about who we are may give a better idea about why we are that way.

The cynics might say "You're only a number in a place this big." And in a way, they're right. Maybe you're not a campus leader, or a genius, a radical or a jock. But your number is different than anyone else's — and that's not just the social security number you had to memorize.

The way you look at and go through life is unique to you.

Jane McClure

"A CELEBRATION OF DIVERSITY"

It sometimes seems absurd that people would celebrate their differences when it's difficult enough to survive in a society holding like views. But differences create a situation of unbalance in which individuals are sometimes forced to evaluate one another's ideas. In doing so, new ideas are considered and old ones often discarded. Hopefully the new ideas move the group in a positive direction.

The 1980 Bomb staff has exemplified a successful means of reaching a goal, despite differences along the way. Since almost every staff member was new to the Bomb this year, we all learned from each other. As each staffer added his or her own talent, the breadth of knowledge and experience of the whole was broadened.

Although we went into the task of compiling Bomb 1980 as a "green" staff, we have reached our goal as an enriched group of individuals.

I would like to thank the 1980 Bomb staff for the long hours of hard work that went into the book. We were a variety of individuals who produced "A Celebration of Diversity."
